Mr. Irwin, whose home is near Montreal, spent two or three days visiting relatives and friends in Lakeshore district this week. He is a cousin of Mark Ferguson and Mrs. Booth. He and Mark had not seen each other since Mark came west—which is to say the least, is quite some time ago. Mr. Irwin is on his way home, after three months trip that took him to the west coast and many points between there and Montreal.

So many kindnesses have been shown us by so many people that we cannot thank each one individually, but we will gratefully remember them always, and when an opportunity comes we will try to pass these kindnesses on to some needy fellow man.

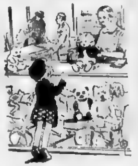
Mrs Santa Claus
HAROLD E CHRISTIE

LAST Christmas our local jewelry store added two new departments [illegible] never had carried before One was a toy counter, where a selection of movie dolls was featured The other—an optical department—catered to the trade who could not afford glasses unless they could arrange to pay for them on credit.

Visiting the shop the night before Christmas, I watched a tiny little girl . . . I'm sure she couldn't have been more than six . . . standing before the already sadly depleted doll counter. Her eyes were big as she looked up at the one doll still unsold, and there was a child's longing in them as she tugged at the tattered overall jacket of her father, busy talking to the optometrist.

"Daddy," she called, her voice shrill with excitement, "look! Isn't it the darlingest thing? Do you think Santa will bring it to me?"

The man's tired face turned toward her, and a hurt expression flushed across it settling hopelessly in the gray eyes. "'Fraid not, Mary," he answered. "I saw Santa [illegible] store down the street a while ago, and he said that he'd be about out of everything by the time he reached our house. Reckon he might have some sweets, or maybe a rag doll, though. And he's promised for sure to bring those glasses.



She turned to make one last appeal!

"Oh!" Tears were in her eyes, but she fought them back bravely, and her worn coat sleeve wiped the last trace of them away.

"I did so want one of them," she whispered "But I'm glad Santa isn't going to bring it to me. It means that he's found someone else who wants it even worser than I do, don't it, Daddy?"

"Come on, Mary," the optometrist called, taking the little girl by the hand "Santa told me to see what kind of glasses you should have, so's to be sure he'd get it right. Now just sit in this chair and do as I say."

The examination didn't last long, and I was still there when it was completed. The optometrist turned to the father. "I'll make a special effort to finish them tonight," he said.

He was back soon, a slip in his hand. "I've fixed it with the management A dollar now, and a dollar a month until the balance of five dollars is paid"

Mary had returned for a final look at the toy. "Don't you think, Daddy, that the glasses could come as a birthday present, and . . . oh, I did want a doll so badly! But but I won't cry."

Her father hadn't heard He was busy feeling in his pockets for the dollar needed for the down payment. He found a lean wallet, and from it pulled a quarter and seven dimes. He counted them over twice, a scared look on his face, then began a renewed search Triumphantly, he finally produced an eighth dime, and handed the silver to the optometrist.

As the man in overalls and his elfin daughter started toward the door, the girl behind the doll counter looked at the optometrist, then at me, a tear in her eye Then she ran after the pair "Wait a moment—isn't your name Mary?" she asked.

"Uh-huh?" the little girl answered, bewildered

"Then I guess Santa meant you He was here just a few minutes ago, and said he had a doll for a little girl named Mary, but he was afraid he wouldn't have the time to deliver it. Then he remembered that the little girl's father said he was coming here, so he asked me if I'd keep the doll and give it to you That's it, up on the counter. Take it and run away, because I'm so busy I haven't time to talk."

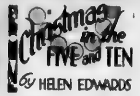
Mary was speechless while her benefactor busied herself behind the counter. Suddenly the girl felt a tug at her skirt, and Mary was at her side, looking up at her. "I believe you're Mrs. Santa Claus," the child whispered, awe in her voice

As the door closed behind the pair, the girl took her purse from her bag and looked inside

"Mrs. Santa Claus, indeed!" I heard her mutter. "Lucky for me this is pay day, or Mrs Santa wouldn't eat tomorrow."



Christmas in the FIVE and TEN
by HELEN EDWARDS

MARY'S feet throbbed Her knees wanted to buckle beneath the weight of her slim young body

"Fifteen minutes more!"

She saw Mr. Adams, the cross-looking floorwalker, frowning in her direction and she hastened to tidy her counter. Clerking in the five and ten, she decided, wasn't such a bad job—except during the Christmas rush

A shabbily dressed old woman stood across the aisle looking wistfully at a display of curly-haired dolls on Mary's counter. The faded blue eyes were making an effort to read the price tag.

"May I help you, madam?" Mary asked. The woman looked up guiltily, then her fingers fumbled nervously at her shabby black purse.

"I—ah—I—no, I don't guess so." The woman turned and almost ran from the store. At the door, however, she turned and slowly retraced her steps to the counter. "How much for that yellow-haired doll, miss?"

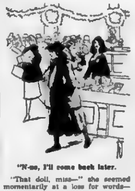
"Twenty-nine cents Shall I wrap it in our gift pack? That will be ten cents extra"

"N—no. I'll come back later. Not tonight, please."

As Mary nodded her head the woman's shoulders seemed to sag lower, and she trudged slowly toward the door.

Mary's thoughts kept returning to the wizened old lady as her tired feet dragged through a long Wednesday and a longer Thursday As she left the store Thursday night she was almost happy, reflecting that there would be but one more day of the Christmas rush.

A timid hand clutched at her arm. Mary recognized her near-customer of the preceding week, and smiled encouragingly.



"N-no, I'll come back later.

"That doll, miss—" she seemed momentarily at a loss for words—"it—is it sold yet?"

"No, we have a few left. Do you want me to save one for you?"

"If you could?"

Mary nodded and the woman hurried away.

Mary selected an especially nice doll the next morning and laid it carefully beneath the counter Then she watched, between spurts of last minute shoppers, for the timid old lady. At noon the doll still rested beneath the counter At six it was still unclaimed When Mary sold her last remaining doll a few moments before nine, she reached for the hidden one

"I'll give her a few minutes more," she decided "If I put it out it will go almost as soon as anyone sees it"

At last she appeared, breathless as if from running She gazed along the counter and stark despair was written in every line of her face

"Am I too late? Are they sold?"

"No, I saved one for you, madam."

"How much did you say it would cost?" The old woman was fumbling in her purse while Mary wrapped the doll "Twenty-five cents, wasn't it? I think I have that much"

Shaking fingers reached into the shabby purse and fumbled into every crease and corner of its flat interior. Two dimes and a penny appeared, and then two more coppers. The woman's face turned white, and the fingers continued to search frantically Finally they reappeared clutching two additional copper coins

"But," Mary began, "it costs—" a picture of some tiny waif waiting for just such a doll flashed through Mary's mind Mary turned to the woman and held it out to her.

As she did so she saw Mr. Adams bearing down upon her, his most ferocious frown upon his face Now she was in for it! Maybe she would be fired And for four cents! Well, it had been worth it.

"Will you say 'Merry Christmas' to the little one for me?" she whispered.

A muffled cough at her side told her that Mr Adams had arrived.

"I saw what you did, Mary, [illegible]—"

"But, Mr Adams, I intended to repay the company from my own purse

"I know—I know I'd have done it myself if you hadn't. Merry Christmas, Mary."

CORPORAL McNew laid his whiskers on the window sill. It wasn't he thought military duty to play the role of Santa Claus at the garrison Christmas party. He couldn't [illegible] the boy [illegible] waiting there. Not [illegible] want to after hearing about that vacancy for a corporal at the recruiting office in Kansas City. McNew had been born there. The colonel [illegible] made it [illegible] more difficult. He [illegible] drummed at the table with his fingers. "I want you especially to convince my son. Make him believe that Santa Claus is really magic. My son [illegible] by anything in the electrical line. He's been [illegible] I've told him that Santa only gives presents to good boys. If you can encourage his belief, it'd help the regiment and—me."

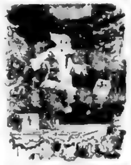
He'd have to be a perfect Santa Claus, McNew thought. Sonny was very skeptical.

Hello! Peeping in the window [illegible]



Tiny lights gleamed about his whiskers.

McNew's fears were confirmed when he emerged from the closet. The whiskers were gone, and he heard Sonny giggling. "I bet Santa Claus ain't magic enough to grow more whiskers. "Here—" McNew tried to hand the boy the package containing the electric train. A firefly rested on his whiskers. "Here, Santa Claus carries his own lights, you know."

"Is it magic?" asked Sonny. "And you grew more whiskers—"

McNew stumbled again, reached for support. The branch cracked and broke. Falling, he caught Sonny's hand. "Here!"

The lights went on. Sonny fled down the steps and McNew saw that the colonel was comforting a weeping boy. A corporal who'd given the colonel's son a switch for a Christmas gift would never be recommended for a recruiting job in his home town.

The annual event at last over, McNew painfully removed the cotton from his chin. His suffering was in vain.

The colonel wanted to see him. McNew hurried. His chin was sore and red, but he managed to salute.

Yes, sir.

"Did you [illegible] the part of Santa Claus before?"

No, sir. McNew suppressed a sigh.

M.D. of Beaver Council Meeting

LAST MEETING FOR 1943

The winding up of odds and ends of business, together with new business kept Councillors of M.D. of Beaver busy at their December meeting held at the District's office at Ryley, Friday, December 10th.

There were present: Reeve Ovens Councillors Anderson, Giebelhaus, Logan, Lucas, Moen and Swabey.

The minutes of the previous meeting were formally adopted as read.

Letter from Patriquin and Johnston, auditors, to Reeve Ovens was read and stated that they had found all books and records in excellent condition. A few recommendations were made and one or two minor adjustments suggested. On the motion of Councillor Swabey the suggested adjustments will be made.

Letter from M. D. of Norma enclosing cheque for $4000.00 was read. The cheque covered the cash payment on the machinery partition arrangement made at the last council meeting.

Letter from Department of Municipal Affairs re indebtedness of M.D. of Beaver to other M.D's., suggesting that Municipal Districts pay out full amounts owing to each other rather than send a cheque less the amount owing them. This was in connection with various settlements due Municipal Districts which had only partly been absorbed by the M.D. of Beaver.

Letter from John Morrow re Francis Daniels. Mr. Daniels desired to pay some money owing on taxes by turning in some War Savings Certificates, but as these were non-negotiable it was suggested other arrangements be made.

Letters from Dr. Adamson of the Clover Bar Health Unit and Dr. Cutsmegavich of the Holden Health Unit regarding the living conditions of Mr. Mike Hands an elderly pen-[illegible] living alone. The letters coincided as to conditions under which Mr. Hands lived and also that for a gentleman 86 years of age he was a remarkable individual. Mr. Hands was quite sure he did not need assistance, but the Dr's thought otherwise and recommended that "something be done." Mr. Hands was proud of the fact that for 25 years he had eaten nothing but pancakes made of his own home ground flour and milk and just to show that somebody must be wrong about this vitamin business, the 86 year old gentleman climbed nimbly the perpendicular stairs leading to his sleeping quarters. Anyway, in the event of a cold snap both doctors thought Mr. Hand's position living alone would be decidedly precarious, and so advised Council.

On the motion of Councillor Giebelhaus a doctor's certificate will be procured in order to Move Mr. Hands to more comfortable quarters.

Mr. Zook interviewed Council regarding some work that he had done on a road in 1942. The work in question consisted of two parts, a four hour item and an 18 hour item. The four hour item was recognized as being ordered but the 18 hour item was done without the proper authorization. The work was done under the jurisdiction of the former M.D. of Beaver Lake and Councillor Lucas was the councillor of the division in which the work was done. Councillor Lucas as a member of the enlarged unit was present and was emphatic in saying that he gave no instructions to grade the road, only to maintain it. Mr. Zook contended he was instructed to "do a good job" but this Councillor Lucas said referred to the four hour item. Mr. Zook had entered suit against the M.D. and it was decided to go into the matter further.

Letters from the Old Age Pension Office regarding a number of old age pension increases.

Letters from the Mothers' Allowance Dept. recording an increase and asking for information regarding one other recipient. The information required was whether the payment of a military allowance due to a sons' enlistment would have any effect on the amount paid by M.D. and Government.

On the motion of Councillor Anderson it was definitely decided it would not.

On the motion of Reeve Ovens it was decided that Councillor Swabey be given authority to grant the Lindberg family what relief he deems necessary.

The road work dispute again came up for consideration and on motion of Reeve Ovens Councillors Lucas and Moen together with the Secretary would get all the details and ask Mr. Brownlee's advice.

In connection with the tax sale Reeve Ovens reported as a committee on valuation. Out of 124 parcels listed only 24 were left and he placed valuations on these.

Report of the auctioneer in connection with the tax sale showed that nobody was present and there were no parcels of land sold.

The desirability of the hamlet of Poe as a residential site seemed at this council meeting. The discussion was started by the offer of Mrs. Mary W. Tchir to purchase lot 12, blk 12 in the Hamlet of Poe. Councillor Logan moved that the above lot be sold to Mrs. Tchir for $15. This motion was carried but later withdrawn.

Further discussion brought a motion by Councillor Logan, that all lots in the Hamlet of Poe be reserved for residential purposes. This resolution was lost.

Reeve Ovens moved that Councillor Logan be a committee of one to value the lots in the hamlet of Poe.

Later in the day there came another request to purchase four lots in the hamlet of Poe and a motion was passed that the four lots requested be sold. (Name of purchaser, for the moment has escaped us.)

Letter from Mr. C. F. Ward enclosing cheque. It was decided that C. F. Ward's offer re taxes be accepted as tax consolidation.

Mr. Sid Powley had been assessed a business tax but does not sell oil or gas any more, so on motion of Councillor Lucas his business tax assessment will be cancelled.

Letter from Mr. F. Riske regarding renting N E 5-51-20, W4. On the motion of Councillor Swabey Mr. Riske will be allowed to cut timber on this land at $2.00 per 1000 ft.

Mr. A. W. Tymchuk wishes to pay taxes on S.W. 26-51-16, W4. The M D has title to this quarter but consolidation will be allowed.

The Cutler Land Co. of Edmonton for one of its clients offered to redeem N of 25-49-13. Council agreed that this be allowed.

On the motion of Councillor Logan the secretary was requested to make out consolidation papers for Mrs. Smorlie to sign.

CHRISTMAS 1943—

IN THIS THE FIFTH Christmas of the second world war, our thoughts cannot help but be influenced by it. We realize that beneath the gaiety and merriment there lies a deep yearning for those things which from childhood up we have learned to associate with Christmas, Peace and Goodwill. But while our hearts yearn for peace and goodwill our minds tell us that in the world of men there can be no peace and no goodwill until victory over tyranny is assured, that mens' hearts and minds must be free. And that commercial supremacy, however desirable, is not the end, but only the means to a way of life by which men and women throughout the whole world may be benefitted.

The Tofield Mercury hopes that all homes, even those upon which war has cast a shadow, may this Christmas, be happy ones, and that the birth of a New Year may bring a sense of joy and security which only peace on earth and goodwill toward men holds.

proached and that a petition be presented to the government. The moral and if possible, some financial support of the M.D. of Beaver council was desired.

Considerable discussion centred around this and all councillors were agreed as to the desirability of having the road graded. It was however recognized, that the cost would be very heavy in relation to municipal finance. It was estimated that gravelling would cost approximately $4000.00 per mile.

Councillor Moen expressed himself in favor of giving a little financial support.

Councillor Anderson said that after the war an era of prosperity was expected and there should be plans ready to be put into effect.

Moved by Councillor Logan that this Council give Councillors Anderson and Swabey in their connection with the gravelling project their fullest support.

Councillor Anderson gave a report on the Thompson incident at Kingman explaining that there had been a misunderstanding which had been amicably settled. On behalf of council he had purchased the Thompson building and lot at Kingman for $300.00. Council ratified this purchase.

On the motion of Councillor Swabey it was decided to ask the government for a little help towards maintaining the north road, which due to heavy traffic was difficult to keep in repair.

Meeting adjourned until 7:00 p.m.

Moved by Councillor Lucas that a number of consolidations as listed be approved.

The closing of the office to the public between Christmas and New Years was discussed. The idea was that the staff would thus be left free to prepare the financial statement and do other necessary work before the end of the year.

On the motion of Councillor Moen it was decided to close the office to the public between Christmas and New Years.

Considerable discussion centred around the publication of the financial statement, whether it should be in book form or in the newspaper. A comparison of costs showed the newspaper much cheaper and it was decided to use that medium.

Councillor Giebelhaus announced he would like to see the district purchase a Carryall and pay for it with the portion of the Victory Bonds brought in from Patricia. The model desired was of ten yard's capacity and cost about $4500.00.

Councillor Logan said he had spent about 90 per cent of his allocation on horses and fresnoes and had little to show for it.

After further discussion it was moved by Councillor Logan that Councillor Giebelhaus be given the authority to purchase a 10 yard capacity Carry all, with power to use a proportion of Patricia government bonds in payment of same.--Carried.

Regarding the application of the Northwestern Utility Co. to rent the north end of the machinery shed at Tofield for three years, the following motion was passed: That we allow the Northwestern Utilities Ltd., to rent the north end of the machine shed at Tofield for three years; two years for lining the building and one year at $6.00 per month. If any increase in taxes are levied by the Town of Tofield due to such arrange[illegible], the [illegible]western Utilities are to pay them. —Carried.

On the motion of Councillor Swabey the District will pay the Northwestern Utilities $140.00 for the season for snow plowing 14 miles of road between Tofield and the west boundary of Municipal District. Also $25.00 for the 6 miles from the gas wells to Viking.

Meeting adjourned.

In the midst of our own darkness and troubles we take up the heavenly refrain and sincerely believe that by giving Glory to God can we have peace and better understanding and real brotherhood. The Junior Choir excelled in their rendition of the story "Star of Hope." The choruses were well sung as also the duet. The recitation of the story by members of the choir was beautifully given.

Shirley Stinson's offertory selection "Star of the East" was most fitting. Great credit and gratitude are due Mrs. Stinson for such a musical treat.

The congregation has expressed their appreciation and their delight in many ways. By request three or four of the selections will be given at the evening service on Sunday.

Word was received here early this week of the death of Mary Martens at Grande Prairie. Death occurred as the result of a fall from a horse.

Our sincere sympathy is extended to the Martens family in the loss of a dear daughter and sister.

Jean Engleshaw was in the hospital several days recently for treatment of blood poisoning in her hand. However, we are glad to report that she has now fully recovered and is able to be back at work again.

Melvin Walker had the misfortune of being kicked by a horse one day last week, keeping him from work for several days. He is now, however, well on the road to recovery.

Last Friday evening the members of the Calf Club held a meeting at the school. After the meeting they all went down to enjoy an hour or so of skating at the skating rink.

A number of neighbors called on and surprised Marguerite Myers last Saturday evening on the occasion of her birthday. An enjoyable evening was spent by all, after which lunch was served and gifts were presented.

A shower was held on Tuesday of last week in honor of Mrs. Art Trent (nee Erline White). The bride was the recipient of many lovely and useful gifts.

Goethe Logsted who is attending the Camrose Lutheran College came home last week end to spend the Christmas holidays.

The pupils of the McKenzie School held their school concert on Wednesday, Dec. 22. A large crowd was present, and under the circumstances, owing to absences because of colds and 'flu, and also little time for practice, a splendid programme was sponsored.

Here's wishing the Mercury, its staff and its readers, a Very Merry Christmas and a Happy, Prosperous New Year.

We are compelled to omit some material which came in late.

WE MUST HOLD THE LINE!

On the home front the battle against inflation is now the most critical of all.

The winning of this battle will contribute much to winning the war.

It will contribute more than all else towards the solution of post-war problems.

The purpose of Price Control is to prevent inflation. Its purpose is to protect and maintain a basic standard of living.

A higher money income will not be of any advantage if, because prices are going up, our money buys less and less.

To win the battle against unemployment in the post-war period, we must first of all win the battle against inflation.

Salaries and wages are a large element, often the largest element, in the cost of everything we buy.

If the Price Ceiling breaks down, in the long run all stand to lose.

We must hold the line against inflation to assure victory in war.

We must hold the line to provide a solid foundation on which, after the war, to build a greater and a better Canada.

A Christmas Carol

by Douglas Whitney

THIS, friends, is a Christmas story though stories of kindliness shouldn't only bob up with Kris Kringle. Our tale is concerned with Robert Parker.

If you don't remember him, ask some of the older folks. Parker was once one of the leading character actors of the legitimate stage. For years he trouped the hinterlands in support of the great names.

The week before Christmas always found Parker in New York at the center table of the Leopards club, the noted actors' organization.

This was his day.

The room was always well filled the week before Christmas. It is a tradition in show business that the weeks preceding Christmas and Easter are the worst in the theater.

Born of extremely poor parents, Parker had never forgotten the miseries of poverty. Each year it had been his custom to arrange a variety show, using the talent of the Leopards club. The money realized went toward the purchase of food baskets which were distributed every Christmas day from the lobby of the clubhouse.

When there was snow, instead of the carriage he would use a sleigh and, like Santa, set out on his annual round. It took a great deal of money, but as a result, Bob was beloved by everyone.

Bob grew older, and his stage engagements became fewer.

One day, at a club meeting Bob stood up and addressed the members: "Gentlemen, I'm getting old. It's time for me to put away my grease paint and costumes, and retire. Before doing so I want to extract a promise from the general membership. I ask that you gentlemen continue to run the annual Christmas basket benefit for the poor. I cannot assume the task any longer. Will you do this for me?"

Actors are a sentimental and generous lot. They promised Bob that the tradition would be faithfully maintained, and honored him further by voting him a life member. And so, retiring from the scene, his visits to the club became infrequent. The baskets were forgotten.

A year ago, Bob came back to the club a little before Christmas. He looked much older, his shoulders bent and his shock of white hair noticeably thinned.

"Gentlemen," he said on rising, "this is probably the last time I shall address this group. I am an old man now. There is one favor I wish to ask of you. As many of you may recall, the distribution of Christmas baskets was my hobby and sole interest outside the theater."

His voice breaking, he continued: "I wish to request you to give once more your time and talents for a benefit, the proceeds to go toward the basket fund."

Moved by the appeal of their old master, the Leopards gathered all their resources and achieved an unusually successful response. Every prominent actor and actress within a day's traveling distance appeared. The theater was jammed to capacity. A large sum of money was realized.

To Bob's supreme delight it was a white Christmas. Since he was too old and feeble to sit again on the driver's seat and guide two prancing horses, the club arranged for the needy to come for their baskets. All day Bob attended to the distribution.

He took the subway home. His smile remained despite his weariness.

An hour later he was seated at a small table in a plainly furnished room. A tiny white-haired lady sat opposite him. "Robert, will you carve, please?" she requested with marked deference.

"With pleasure, Mrs. Parker. White meat?"

"Yes, if you please, Robert."

"This is a wonderful occasion," he said. "Were you embarrassed, dear? I hated to do it, Mary. When you came to the head of the line and I handed you the basket, I was afraid that some of the boys would recognize you as my wife."

He seemed a trifle perplexed. "Strange I should have felt uncomfortable about it," he mused. "Surely two as poor as we deserve a Christmas basket, don't you think?"

The Last Christmas Card

MA SAWYER sewed the final stitch in the Christmas turkey while she kept her ear "peeled" for the postman's step. Still, she actually dreaded his coming lest he bring another card of loving regrets like the one received yesterday from their son Fred. Even four grown boys did not dispel the possibility of a lonely Christmas for Ma and Pa.

She answered the double ring, and forced a smile as she waved Ben's card at Pa. "He can't make it, neither. None of them ever yet mailed a card unless they wasn't coming."

When she came out, Pa asked mildly, "You ain't gittin' a cold, are you, Ma?"

"Cold? Nonsense, Pa. Just the Christmas onions, I s'pose." "Oh, Jim will make it easy, seeing his children is almost grown. And Billy most died of disappointment 'cause he [illegible]'t come home last year. But folks can't travel with a new baby and three other [illegible] ones. This year it'll be much [illegible] for him."

When Ma left her tree decorations to throw a log in the stove, the crimson glow might have shown Pa the lines of fearful doubt on her round face. But he had just wasted another match on his pipe. "Suppose neither Jim nor Billy can come?" ran through Ma's tortured mind.

At quarter to four, she wished the letter carrier a merry Christmas and hurried back, her hands filled with cards. This was the last mail. If neither son had written, it would mean both boys would arrive about six laden with mysterious bundles.

Then Ma spied Jim's bold writing in its usual purple ink. There was a special message for his parents and a five-dollar bill.

"The spruce trimmings look fine, Pa," she said. "I won't think of the mess when it dries, for Billy does set such store by Christmas. And coming on Sunday this year, it will give them an extra day to stay." A peal of the bell interrupted her. "It's Billy, got off a little early," she called as she hurried to the door.

"Overlooked this before, Mrs. Sawyer."

The postman beamed, because he didn't know that Ma's expectant smile was not for him. "Overlooked this before, Mrs. Sawyer."

Silently Ma passed the card to Pa after her own swift perusal. The simplest greeting in Billy's careless scrawl, "Sorry we can't make it."

"Well, I s'pose everything is for the best, Pa. What with all I've cooked, it wouldn't do any harm to invite poor Miss Coombs over."

Pa packed his pipe slowly. "You sure hanker after work, Ma," he sighed.

"We might as well cut into the ham and cake. That'll be enough."

"You ain't eating before six?"

"Might's well. I'm starved," she lied. Four boys and all alone for Christmas! Not one of them able to come home. A short, clipped ring of the bell. Fred's present, perhaps Billy's, too.

"Express package," sang a man's voice. But the thought of a square brown box held no thrills for Ma. It was her brown square-shouldered son she wanted as she opened the door.

Three children stamped the snow from their feet, and before Ma reached the kitchen Billy's wife had deposited the woolly clad baby on Pa's lap. And then Ma found herself folded within Billy's spacious overcoat with its smell of tobacco and crisp fresh air.

"Ha-ha! Expressman, huh?" roared Billy, relinquishing Ma with a kiss. "Didn't expect us so early, did you? Didn't hope for such good luck when we wrote. You got our card?"

"Oh, sure, but—Pa, what did you read on Billy's card?"

"What'd I read? Why, just something about having shopping to do. But you read it, Ma."

"Yes, yes, of course I read it, Billy. I—"

"Ma!" He caught her hand. "Say, you're not catching cold, are you? Good grief, Ma, you're not crying?" His arms were about her again.

"Crying? Nonsense, you silly boy. But onions is onions even at Christmas," said Ma.

"YOUNG HEARTS AND OLD HEARTS—WHERE E'ER YE MAY BE . . . . "

A Sailor who regularly broadcasted from Vancouver, always ended his broadcast with: "Big Ships and Little Ships, Where E'er Ye May Be . . . . . ."

And so, like Terry, we send our greetings far and wide. We realize that familiar faces will be missing from many homes this Christmas, and to those Young Hearts and Old Hearts but withall, Stout Hearts, far from loved ones, and to those at home, we send our fondest, yet simplest, greeting—

Fire Destroys Home

On Friday afternoon last about 4:30 the home of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Tiedeman, immediately west of town, was discovered to be on fire.

Mrs. Miller, who lives nearby, was hanging out some clothes when she noticed smoke coming out of the eaves and side of the building. She gave the alarm to Mrs. Tiedeman and Mrs. Wolf, Mrs. Miller's mother, rushed to the nearest telephone and gave the alarm to Central.

The fire truck made good time getting to the fire but the north wall upstairs was well ablaze before its arrival. The cause of fire was undetermined, it appearing that it started in the north wall upstairs The chimney was apparently in good condition. Prior to Mrs. Miller telling her, Mrs. Tiedeman did not know her home was on fire. Willing helpers quickly removed the contents, and while the house was completely demolished, most of the contents were saved.

There was no insurance.

A rather strange co-incidence is that Mr. Tiedeman's brother also lost his home a few weeks ago by fire.

GORDON TOUGH KILLED IN ACTIVE SERVICE

(Vic Bates)

Word has been officially received by Mr. and Mrs. Tough that their eldest son, Gordon, has been killed on active service in Italy

With his chum, George Campion, Gordon enlisted in the 49th Edmonton Regiment in Jan. 1940. They volunteered to go overseas and left the following May.

George has this to say from Sicily: "As I write this Gordon and I are sitting in a slit trench. Jerry has been shelling us all afternoon but so far our luck has been good. Gordon received a shrapnel wound on the hand as we raided the town of Leonforte the other night. I bandaged him up and we kept going. The Jerries counter-attacked and really made it hot for awhile " (Later) "We don't care much for this country, for one thing it's much too hot We're both as thin as rails now But one good point, there is all kinds of fruit."

Gordon married in England and news last week that her brother had been killed in an accident. Our deepest sympathy is extended to her.

Mr. and Mrs. Booth motored to Edmonton to spend Christmas day with Mr. and Mrs. Bill McIntyre and family the following is an excerpt from his last letter: "Well Mother, I just got your letter and was sure glad to hear from you. Of his wife he says: "I have not had any mail from her since I've been on the Island. Yes, Mom, it's too bad we didn't get some pictures of us before I left but we did not know I was coming But she is going to get some of her and the Baby and send some to me. I sure get lonesome for her out here When you see her I am sure you will think just the same about her as I do. I'm just waiting for the day when I can get back with them for good."

Mr. and Mrs. Trueman Jacobson and Dennis were with home folk here over New Year's.

Gordon was fond of his horses and asks. "How is Silver? I guess my Sonny-Boy thinks I am never coming back "

Gordon's mother recalls that one of his farewell acts before leaving to answer the call of his country was to have a last look at the playgrounds, the scene of many a care free hour with the young people of the district

Yes, Gordon has made the supreme sacrifice but his many qualities and good nature will serve to keep his memory with us for many a day

The deep sympathy of the district is extended to Mr. and Mrs. Tough and family.

Our feelings of sympathy are also tendered to Mr. Wanncroft and family at the sad loss of wife and mother

We are pleased to see Mr. Ellis apparently hale and hearty, home again after an extended visit to the coast

Co-Op Store

Co-operation Will Celebrate It's Centenary

With the advent of 1944 the modern co-operative movement will celebrate its first century of existence. The Rochdale co-operative store was started by a handful of poor weavers in that English town in 1844. It is on the principles as laid down by the founders of that co-operative enterprise that the movement has expanded over the world until it has now reached a membership of some 70 million people in 40 nations.

Times were hard in Rochdale in 1844. A strike of flannel weavers had failed and many were out of employment. Food prices were high and prospects looked very gloomy. One winter evening twenty-seven men and one woman got together to discuss what could be done to improve their lot in life. They had virtually no capital—their wages were only a penny or two an hour. Nevertheless, they decided to start in business in a co-operative way. Each individual agreed to contribute tuppence a week to provide capital for the co-operative venture. By December, 1844, they had managed to save 28 pounds. Then they decided to rent a store and on December 21st, Samuel Ashworth, a member of the group, opened a co-operative.

Today, the Rochdale Co-operative Society has a membership of over 30,000 and its capital has increased to over 588,000 pounds. But more than this, it has definitely established that the co-operative principles as laid down by the weavers in 1844 are a sound foundation on which to build this method of doing business.

These principles are seven in number and are as follows:

1. The principle of universality, which means that the movement should recognize no difference in language, color or creed.

2. The principle of democracy which provides that each member shall have one vote in the affairs of the co-operative.

3. The principle of equity provides for fairness, impartiality and equal justice among the membership. It is this principle which makes it imperative in co-operatives to treat capital as a servant only; to pay it a "fixed wage" in the form of legitimate interest but not to give it any privilege or dividend of capital stock or voting power based on the number of shares owned, as are given in ordinary stock companies.

4. The principle of unity provides that all extraneous matters be kept out of co-operative meetings (including religious and political discussions) so that the members could concentrate on those matters in which their interests were united.

5. The principle of economy provides for the elimination of unnecessary middlemen and all waste and leakages. Based on this principle co-operators maintain that competition is expensive and wasteful and that the greatest degree of economy and unity in industry and trade can only be obtained through centralization of effort.

6. The principle of publicity as developed by the Rochdale pioneers meant for openness in business affairs and willingness at all times on the part of executives to impart to the members all information which may help them to get a clear picture of the condition of their co-operative. It was contended that the greatest bulwark against the attacks of opponents was a loyal, well-informed membership, fully conscious of the aims and purposes of the co-operative.

7. The principle of liberty, last on the list is an important one. Liberty and freedom have always been highly appreciated by advanced and civilized people. True loyalty can never be enforced on the people but must come as a voluntary action on their part. It must depend on the inner conviction of the soundness and desirability of the moment.

A century is but a brief period in the long history of mankind, but in the hundred years since the Rochdale pioneers started their little store amid the jibes and sneers of competitors, substantial progress has been made in developing this altruistic movement. Co-operation is based on providing a useful service for the people without exploitation. It prevents the accumulation of wealth at the expense of the multitudes and gives its membership an opportunity to work out their own destinies and to live fuller and happier lives.

British Do Not Know They Are Eating Canadian Bacon

It does seem too bad for the sake of the Canadian hog industry that the people in the old country, who at present are getting their largest bacon supply from Canada, do not know that the meat they look for so eagerly comes from the Dominion.

Of course, it is understandable that some of the bacon does not come up to the "Wiltshire" standard, so long dinned into Canadian ears, as the last word in bacon excellence. Difficulties in transportation to seaboard, hazards of convoy and the problems confronted in the process of curing, may each or all play their part in the British consumer not holding the bacon which they are eating these days in high esteem. In fact, before the war they were not "crazy" about it—for our bacon sold at the bottom of the price list.

Interesting new points on the matter have been brought out by Mary-Etta Macpherson, managing editor of Chatelaine Magazine, in an article in the Toronto Financial Post, with a London dateline, from which extracts are quoted below:

"Will Canada still have an "in" with the British bacon market after the war?"

"Yes, most definitely yes," was the way Frank Herbert, president-director of the Danish Bacon Co., replied. "At present Britain is receiving her largest bacon supplies from Canada. Next in size are the shipments from the United States; after that comes our home production and a small quantity from Northern Ireland.

"Canada's farmers who have done so magnificently by us in wartime are going to continue to play an exceedingly important role in the feeding of this country."

This British businessman is no idle dreamer; he has statistics and surveys and a long experience in private and public business to back him up. He has served on the Meat Advisory Committee of which Lord Linlithgow was chairman, and has worked with the Food Defence Plans Department which got under way at the time of Munich, and drew up the master plan for the feeding of Britain, if and when war should come.

Everybody in the Danish Bacon Co. is enthusiastic about Canadian bacon. This isn't only from the standpoint of breakfast eating, but from their strictly professional point of view as well.

Our Canadian bacon is uniform, they say; one can depend on each smoked, half-hog weighing the required 56 pounds, or at least within a few ounces of that mark, either way. This is important, not just for a parade ground effect as the bacon hangs from the hooks, but because the wholesaler and retailer can tell at a glance exactly how many pounds of ham or "gammon", rib portion, and so on, can be cut from each flitch.

The government and the meat handling trade now have a first-class working acquaintance with our bacon, but to a Canadian it seems somewhat unfortunate that the consuming public should be left in the dark.

Bacon here is sold simply as bacon, with no information as to its place of origin. Hence the British public is not informed of the origin of the bacon being bought.

Thus, it may some day happen, that Canada, producer and donor of colossal amounts of this commodity to the United Kingdom in time of war, will find it necessary to launch a big-scale advertising and general promotion campaign here in the interests of Canadian bacon. And it wouldn't surprise me greatly if the old-established Danish Bacon Co. were to give its blessing and support to the project. War makes strange bedfellows, and even traditional rivals can learn to like each other and work together for a common purpose.

The article describes one of the large warehouses where there are stores of Canadian eggs, cheese and bacon in almost every stage of its processing: "green" as it arrives—the halves of the hog tied up in burlap; "washed after treatment in the hosing room; and smoked after 48 hours' suspension over smouldering sawdust in a sealed chamber.

"And it was my unique experience to hear the high quality of our Canadian bacon extolled by officials of the Danish Bacon Co.—largest British import-distributors of this commodity and before the war dealing mainly in shipments from Denmark.
—Market Examiner.

LINDBROOK

Well folks! you've all been singing and howling for a "White Christmas" and now you've gotten it; hope it suits you all. Luckily it is not cold, and think of the long winded yarns of old timers we should have had to listen to re their experiences of "green" Christmases many, many years ago.

Lindbrook folks however, were saddened this Christmas on receiving the news of the death of Mrs. John Woonarroft, one of our real old timers here. The late Mrs. Woonacroft was for many years an invalid, often in great pain, but despite it all took a great interest in life and was practically in full possession of all her faculties until the end. The sympathy of us all goes out to Mr. John Woonacroft and her two daughters, Mrs. Geo. Weatherill of Tofield and Mrs. Norman Ellis of Hastings Lake, as well as several grandchildren.

No doubt you recognize that your "old scribe" is writing this and said 'old -----' would like to thank the members of the Associated Press of Lindbrook School who have taken over the job of purveying the news in his absence. We would like to compliment them on the quality and quantity of same, also on the businesslike way of writing same.

The Annual Christmas Concert was held at the Hall Thursday last, 23rd of December. It was not the usual full programme owing to school starting later this fall. All the same what there was of it was very good and the "Pistol Packing Mamma skit" put on by the very juniors of the juniors certainly seemed number one in the Hit parade that night. A nice lunch was served and the kiddies got presents and the usual candies, etc. although owing to the scarcity, these were somewhat curtailed.

Several Lindbrook folks away were able to get home for Christmas: Pte. W. C. Lancaster, Veterans Guard of Canada from Lethbridge; Mr. Alex Meers, employed by the U.S. Army at Dawson Creek, B.C. also made it and your scribe from Edmonton. There are very likely several more of whom we have no [illegible].

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Evans spent Christmas with Mr. Fred's mother at Athabasca, leaving the "beenery" no! that should be "apiary", a beenery is a lunch counter and an apiary has nothing to do with apes, it's a bee's colony or empire; as we were saying the "beenery" is in charge of Miss Carol Bracegirdle, Queen of the Bees.

Mr. Ronnie Richardson is home on a holiday from the University of Alberta where he is a student in Engineering.

Only about 360 odd shopping days till Christmas, aren't you glad!

Well here's wishing the Editor and staff of the Mercury and all our friends and neighbors of the surrounding countryside and city of Tofield a very Happy and Prosperous and we hope Victorious New Year from us all at Lindbrook.

C.N.R. Contribution To Canada's War Effort In '43 Covered Many Activities Of Vital Importance

For more than four years, the Canadian National Railways have been doing the largest and the most exacting industrial war job in Canada. The job has required the constant, unremitting attention of tens of thousands of men and women, twenty-four hours a day, seven days a week and it does not seem amiss to say that had this job not been done so well, the nation's fine war record would have fallen far short of its very high mark.

To support this statement, sweeping though it may seem, it is necessary only to make two facts known. They are these. During the period starting September 1, 1939, and ending the last week of December, 1943, the Canadian National Railways have carried more than 291,400,000 tons of freight and more than 96,200,000 passengers. You will find these to be breath-taking figures if you take the trouble to study and analyse them a little while. Certainly, they have never been approached in the transportation history of Canada, nor are they likely to be again for many years to come.

Freight is the mainstay, not only of the railway but of industry as a whole. For run one, not always easy to see, the public thinks of freight in terms of manufactured goods whereas, in practice, freight consists largely of raw materials from which goods are to be manufactured and the coal and the oil necessary to manufacture them. Industry, therefore, has been dependent upon the railways not only to haul away the completed munitions of war, but to bring in the raw materials to make them. The service of the railways is a two-way one and without either, industry would quickly stagnate.

It is not only in the primary field of providing transportation that the Canadian National Railways have been helpful to the war industry of the nation. The contribution of the company, in other ways, has been no less important even if, to the general public, it is virtually unknown. The Research and Development Department of The System, through the application of the principles of research, has voluntarily contributed much to the success and relative economy with which huge undertakings of wartime have been conducted. Its services have been available to government and private industry alike and it has made many of the economic studies that finally determined the location of major industrial operations. Each project has had problems peculiar to itself, but requiring a careful analysis of such general locational features as labor supply, sources of raw materials, power supply, topography, etc., and a detailed study of relative transportation costs, to determine, not where such operation could be located but where it should be located to fulfil its function adequately, at a minimum cost to the country. The department's knowledge of the country as a whole, its wealth of statistical data and its experience in interpreting and correlating such data, has meant that its facilities have been in constant demand by those responsible for producing the nations armament.

The department has also assisted importantly, both through field work and studies associated with their proper location, in the solution of problems connected with establishing at strategic points across the country, the many large storages of war materials awaiting shipment overseas. This scientific approach to questions of location has likewise been applied to the problems of the armed forces, especially in the establishment of Ordnance and Stores Depots. It is probably a fair assumption that the availability of the Canadian National's trained staff of Development Engineers has resulted, not only in "dollar savings" but also vital "time savings" in a critical period in our history. Likewise the talents and energies of the experts in the Land Department of the Canadian National Railways have been fully and abundantly employed in helping the government to acquire land sites quickly and economically. It is fair to say that the help given by this staff of the company's trained men was an important factor in permitting Canada to get its air programme into operation quickly and effectively. No less than 226 pieces of property were acquired by the Land Department for purposes in connection with this air programme, work that involved negotiations with more than 1600 property owners.

As well as aiding industry by supplying transportation services and through other channels such as those mentioned, the Canadian National Railways System is, itself, a producer of munitions on a large scale and in two distinct fields of endeavor.

The company's Prince Rupert Dry Dock is one of seven major yards now building Canadian 10,000-ton cargo vessels. Prior to engaging in the construction of freighters, this yard turned out four minesweepers of the Bangor class for the Royal Canadian Navy. After delivering six 10,000 ton cargo ships of the North Sands type, it is now building Victory ships, one of which has already been completed. About 1600 men are employed in this shipyard which has also been engaged in naval ship and cargo ship repair work. The North Sands type of vessel referred to is 427 feet long, has a beam of 57 feet 2 inches, and its draft is 26 feet 6 inches. It has a speed of from 10 to 11 knots per hour and carries a crew of 40, exclusive of gunners.

At Point St. Charles, Montreal, the company is operating a Crown-owned industry, National Railways Munitions Limited. Here, with a staff of some 1200 men and women, 500 12-pounder naval guns and mountings have been built and delivered. It also has orders for 1,000 four-inch naval guns Mark XIX and these are about 60 per cent completed. In addition it has a contract for several 4.5"-5.5" gun-howitzer carriages and more than half the number ordered have already been delivered. This is a universal gun mount which can carry both the 4.5 inch field gun and the 5.5 inch howitzer. It has been in production for many months and just recently was removed from the British Army list of secret weapons. It is considered one of the most efficient pieces of artillery designed during this war and is credited with superior performance in every theatre of war. The 12-pounder naval gun weighs about 7000 pounds and fires 60 12-pound shells a minute. It has been very effective in anti-submarine warfare. In addition to the work mentioned, National Railways Munitions is also engaged in turning out aircraft components and more than 20 parts for other gun factories.

This recital of just a few of the numerous extra-curricular but nevertheless important duties in which the company has been caused by the war to engage, may serve to indicate how widespread and diverse are the wartime activities of the Canadian National Railways. They are, of course, over and above the normal pursuits of the System even though co-incidentally the extent and responsibilities of these normal occupations have been tremendously increased by wartime demands. These additional burdens have not been thrust upon just one or two departments of the System, all branches, rail, steamship, express, telegraphs, hotel and air—through Trans-Canada Air Lines—have had to accept them. It is a matter of considerable pride to management and staff alike that no task has yet proved too difficult to be accomplished.

TOWERING up from the most outstanding location in Quebec on the cliff which overlooks the St. Lawrence River, the Chateau Frontenac, one of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's country-wide chain of "grand hotels", celebrates its 50th anniversary on December 17, 1943. Built on the spot where once rose the Chateau St. Louis, official residence of early French governors and in a city where sea lanes and rail lines converge, the great hotel is one of the best known in the world.

As the above pictures illustrate, today's Chateau Frontenac (inset), with 723 guest rooms, is much enlarged over the 1893 hostelry (main picture) which started the company's move into the coast-to-coast hotel field. In 1898-99 the first addition, the Citadel Wing, was made to the original structure. Since then the Mont Carmel Wing in 1908-09, the St. Louis Wing in 1920-23 and the Central Tower, from 1920-24 have been added, with further major improvements being made in 1926.

Some of the additions called for marvels of planning such as the excavation of more than 40,000 cubic yards of rock from a space entirely surrounded by adjacent structures, which continued in full operation, thereby reducing the [illegible] to the minimum. Masonry on the tower was completed during the winter and often storms and high winds made it impossible to work.

Very few hotels anywhere have had their royal guests as the Chateau Frontenac, which has housed in its day King George V, Their Majesties, King George VI and Queen Elizabeth, during the Royal Visit of 1939 and governors general of Canada and their consorts from the Earl of Aberdeen down to the Earl of Athlone.

With all this in its 50-year background of [illegible] it still remained for August of 1943 to bring its greatest hour to the Chateau Frontenac, which is managed by B. A. Neale and under the direction of H. F. Mathews, general manager of hotels. Last August it was for 10 days the very nerve centre of the Quebec Conference [illegible] Prime Minister Winston Churchill and President Franklin Delano Roosevelt met in the Ancient Capital with Prime Minister W. L. Mackenzie King.

NINETEEN HUNDRED AND FORTY-FOUR—

THE COMING OF a new year in Alberta is most always accompanied by frigid temperatures, snow covered hills and valleys and occasionally stormy weather. Therefore the immediate sense of security the lush pastures and sunny skies of June give us is not felt, but in its place there is the stern lesson of the winter of the seasons. Perhaps this is just as well because while all of us with all our hearts sincerely wish all and sundry a Happy New Year we all know that pure happiness is rarely a continued experience, even for the length of one year, and like the winter of the seasons, cares, troubles and even sorrow is the pre-destined lot of mortals. But such is the power of the sunshine that is within us, all of us do, upon the commencement of a new division of time, wish all and sundry a Happy New Year—and mean it.

The years come and go in an unending stream. As the mantle clock for us ticks off life's seconds, the great clock of the universe, the sun, moon, planets and stars, measure, for eternity perhaps, periods of time. For us mortals the Great Clock tells us when we must awake to the possibilities and responsibilities of a New Year and when, earth's fruits having been garnered, we may relax and enjoy the bounties of nature. It tells by various seasons and an everlasting cycle, the time to work and the time to rest.

As one grows older time seems to pass more quickly and in retrospect New Year's Day, 1943, seems but a short distance away. But the twelve months of time, which looking back seems very brief, has been an eventful period. Within many homes, within the area in which most of us live, work and trade; in Canada and throughout the world generally, epoch making events have occurred. There have been few years in which the forces which go to make dynamic living have had greater sway. An armed world has seen great victories won and great losses incurred, has seen nearly whole cities demolished and proud ships sink beneath the waves. Boys scarcely out of their teens have gone on perilous missions and some have not come back. But above all, a world at arms has seen the forces of freedom emerge from the deep valley of tyranny and commence to ascend the hill of tomorrow. The sun of knowledge, the rain of understanding and the breezes of information have been much in evidence, and from them have flowered international conferences such as in all the history of the world has never been seen before, and from which will spring events that will affect the lives of millions now living and more millions as yet unborn.

Within the area in which those who read this paper live, work and trade, there have been changes also. It is hardly necessary to say that the year 1943 saw the birth of a new municipal government system which will effect, in some degree, the lives of many people living within this area. The complete area of three and also part of the area of two more former municipalities were merged into one unit and there are now seven councillors where previously there were twenty or more. Generally speaking, the change was made without enthusiasm on the part of the average ratepayer, but having been so ordered, it was put into effect. One year is hardly sufficient time to evaluate the change. Technically both as regards office technique and road work activity the year has been one of adjustments. There was the problem of becoming settled in a permanent home and problems in which a give and take spirit had to be exercised. In the matter of taxes the measure by which much of municipal endeavor is judged, some ratepayers were called on to pay more than previously and others less. The year economically to most ratepayers was a fairly good one.

Having successfully navigated and survived its first year of existence, M.D. of Beaver will no doubt in time prove its worth. Throughout the coming year and as each year follows its predecessor, new innovations will most likely be brought into being. Already a new and improved system of tax recording is being put into effect. Ratepayer interest, and within reason co-operation, is asked for and if this is generously given the change over from a municipal to something akin to a county form of government, should prove a success.

But while swiftly moving and history making international events have their interest and play their part in the everyday lives of all citizens, and while dominion, provincial and municipal affairs are closer to home and easier to understand, it is the individual's personal experience which make or mar happiness for him or her. A successfully passed examination for a school boy or girl, obtaining a situation or the acquisition of a personal treasure can make or mar happiness for the young. Good or poor health, a sick or well baby, good crops or poor crops may spell happiness or disappointment for others. It is the little losses and little gains of the things that are good and not good for us that go to make or mar human happiness. We are told that man is master of his own destiny, which, if it is true, goes to show that the degree of human happiness achieved is in proportion to the amount of good done or not done to others.

WE LOSE ONE AND GAIN ONE—

JUST BEFORE THE close of the year the Mercury received word that an old and valued country correspondent was retiring. Shortly after the Mercury commenced publication in 1918 we received some copy from Mrs. Flaaten of Amisk Creek and during the twenty-five years which have elapsed since that time, Mrs. Flaaten has never failed to keep the district informed of the doings of her particular residential corner. Purely a voluntary arrangement, Mrs. Flaaten has helped out the Mercury tremendously and we extend to her our sincere thanks and genuine appreciation of the valued service rendered through the years. Mrs. Flaaten's connection with the Mercury was probably in one respect unique as during the quarter century of writing for the Mercury we saw her but two or three times. In a letter to the Editor, Mrs. Flaaten says, age has now restricted her activities and she desired to cease writing. And while it is with regret we accept her ruling, it is with pleasure that we note through Mrs. Flaaten's thoughtfulness, Amisk Creek will not in future be unrepresented in the columns of the Mercury.

Half A Million Persons Leave Farms

It is estimated that 400,000 men and probably at least 100,000 women have left the farms since 1939 so Arthur McNamara, Deputy Minister of Labour and Director, National Selective Service, told the Dominion-Provincial Agricultural Conference which met recently in Ottawa. Tens of thousands of young farmers are serving on the battle fronts. Thousands of others went with munitions factories during the first two years of the war when it was so vital that fighting weapons be supplied in ever increasing volume. Mr. McNamara paid tribute to the older people left on the farms, who with their young boys and girls have worked harder and produced more. Thousands of men and women, he said, have come back from well-earned retirement to help Canada's war effort on the farm front. Older men and women realize this extra work will probably impair their health, that it may shorten their lives, but they have concluded that in total war, casualties are inevitable in all age brackets and on all fronts.

He said that Selective Service regulations have been a factor in stabilizing employment on farms and reviewed what the Government has done in an effort to overcome some of the difficulties in connection with farm labour shortage.

ARMY NOTES

One young Canadian soldier will likely never think of a shower bath in later years without smiling. Seeking a bath shortly after he enlisted recently, the lad was ushered into the shower room with its dozens of shower nozzles but nary a bath or a tin tub in sight, and shower nozzles were something he had never run into before. He solved the problem nicely, however, when he spied a couple of chlorinated foot baths and calmly proceeded to sit in one while he put his feet in the other.

V V V

Out to back up her father and two brothers, who are serving in the Canadian Army, is Mary Chornomud of Ebenezer, Sask., who enlisted recently in the Canadian Women's Army Corps. Mary's father, Nick Chornomud, is with the Veterans' Guard of Canada; one brother, Johnny, is overseas, and another brother, William, is with the army in Canada.

V V V

During the height of the Christmas mail movement overseas an average of 100 parcels each day were re-packed, re-addressed and sent on their way by the salvage section of the Army Postal Corps at Base Post office. Too often there were parcels battered beyond repair, the contents ruined and fit only for the incinerator; nevertheless the salvage section performed wonders and saved many a gift that might otherwise never have reached its destination. Carelessness in packing, injudicious selection of contents, loose wrapping and improper addressing were responsible for all losses.

Hens Inherit Crooked Bones

For years many farmers have believed that crooked breast bones in chickens were caused by crowding on perches, or by the birds being in an unnatural position while roosting. However, Veterinary authorities say that chickens inherit this tendency, and that such deformed birds should be culled out of the breeding flock. The type of perches used also influences the tendency, it is reported. Well-rounded perches should be provided, and young birds should not be allowed to roost too early.

It is said that many women use less than the 850 words of Basic English, but of course there's a terrific turnover. —Punch.

THE WORLD OF WHEAT

QUALITY IN WHEAT

The almost frantic war demands for livestock products from our prairies, and the consequent necessity of producing large acreages of coarse grains to feed to livestock, have somewhat taken our minds away from our stable product—wheat. My own opinion, however, has always been that after the war wheat once again will be the mainstay of our prairies. For myself I believe that European countries will tend to produce more of their own livestock products and to grow less of their own wheat, simply because we can produce wheat cheaper. Once again, therefore the quality of Canadian wheat will be of paramount importance.

This coming spring is none too soon for farmers to endeavour energetically to maintain and even to improve the quality of our prairie wheat crop. There is no better way to do this than to use a few bushels of the highest quality seed, registered and sealed in the sack by the Government, and to sow this on a few acres of clean summerfallow. Such a few bushels multiplied for two or three years would supply any farmer with all the seed required for all his acreage, would ensure a high quality crop and so would bring to the farmer a greater return for his efforts both in yield and in grade.

Hog Production Costs

The cost of producing a 200-pound hog is placed at $20.33 by the University of Alberta and $20.60 by the Dominion Experimental station at Lacombe. A tabulation of the complete costs in each instance was recently issued by the Alberta department of agriculture.

In both surveys of production costs, generous allowances were made with respect to each and every item included. For instance, the University tabulation allows $1.17 for each pig as interest on the capital invested, $1.43 per pig as depreciation on the investment, $5.10 per pig for incidentals (including labor at $3.00 per pig) and $12.63 per pig as feed costs.

NEW ENGLAND FISH

Six hundred million pounds of seafood are caught by New England fisherman each year, 85 per cent of this consisting of only ten species of fish.

BACON FOR BRITAIN

Canada's Guarantee

450 MILLION POUNDS

Canada will try to deliver

to help Britain maintain the present weekly ration of 4 oz. per person.

To meet this need every pig possible will be needed and more sows should be bred now.

In hog production the largest item of expense is feed cost.

Practical trials on a wide scale show that under farm conditions and with good management a pig can be raised to 200 lbs. (150 lb. carcass) on an equivalent of 1000 lbs. of barley or wheat. This includes the sow's feed.

After making a liberal allowance for other costs, such as interest, depreciation and labour, the net returns on grain fed to hogs under good management, should not be less than the amount shown below.

B-1 Hog Price at Farm	Barley per Bushel	Barley per 100 lbs.	Feed Wheat per bushel	Feed Wheat per 100 lbs.
15c.	74c.	$1.54	$0.91	$1.51
16c.	81c.	$1.69	$1.00	$1.66
17c.	88c.	$1.83	$1.09	$1.81

MINISTIK

On Saturday, December 11, 1943, a shower was held at Ministik Hall for one of the local girls, Miss Dorothy Williams, who has been a War Worker in Edmonton for over 2 years.

The first part of the evening was spent in a program which was enjoyed by all present. This was followed by contests and quiz games conducted by Mrs. Jack Swabey. The bride then came forth to open her many pretty and useful presents which were drawn in a cradle by little Norma Smith. After this was done and presents viewed by those present, lunch was served.

The evening closed by the community extending their best wishes to the bride and to her fiance who was unable to be present due to war duties. The young couple were married on December 16, 1943, in Edmonton.

Beaver Lake Calf Club

The second calf club meeting was held at the McKenzie School on December 17, at 8.30 p m. Two speakers were present besides Mr. Mosey. Mr Gandier speaking on club organizations in Alberta, Mr Charnetski on the care and maintenance of our calves. The visiting speakers brought their projector, and Mr. Moisey showed some very interesting pictures on the showing of beef cattle.

The next meeting will be held on January 19, 1944 at McKenzie school.

Enteritis In Swine

(Alberta Dept. of Agriculture)

The term enteritis is used to cover the majority of diseases affecting the intestinal tract of swine. This condition is increasing in prevalence amongst our swine and threatens to become one of our leading hog troubles.

The exact causitive organism of this condition is not known. Numerous organisms have been found in these cases, but these no doubt make their appearance after some other factor has caused damage to the intestinal tract, thus preparing an avenue for infection by these organisms to gain entrance.

These predisposing factors are many and varied.

1. The feeding of a diet high in fibre content to little pigs just before and after weaning, when their digestive tract is very delicate, results in such damage.

2. Improper mixing of the various mineral and protein supplements with the feed may result in too high a concentration of the various minerals contained therein being ingested by the pig at one time.

3. Improper nutrients in the ration, notably an inadequate amount of Vitamin A. Lack of this vitamin results in the destruction of the tissue cells lining the digestive tract. Under normal conditions these cells serve as a barrier to infection. Once this barrier is destroyed, these organisms which are normally present in the digestive system, assume a pathogenic role and may cause the death of the animal.

4. Insanitary conditions which result in an accumulation of these organisms.

5. Other conditions, such as drafts, undue exposure and shipping, which lower the resistance of the pig may play a part in causing an outbreak of this condition.

Enteritis affects swine of all ages but is more severe in younger animals. It may be ushered in by the sudden death of one or more pigs, with no observable symptoms being shown. Diarrhoea is usually present and the affected animal prefers to remain in the bedding. Often the pig will approach the trough, take a mouthful of feed and return to the sleeping quarters. Occasionally, vomiting occurs. The affected pig quickly becomes gaunt with sunken flanks. The condition rapidly spreads to other pigs in the same pen and the mortality may be quite high.

Control lies in proper feeding, care and management, says Dr. R. Walton, Animal Pathologist. The feeding of alfalfa meal, alfalfa hay, or fortified fish oil would ensure an adequate provision of Vitamin A. Overcrowding should be avoided. The annual rotation of the hog pasture would cause large reduction in losses not only from this condition but also from worms and other diseases of swine.

As soon as the condition is noted the sick pigs should be removed and the quarters throughly cleaned and disinfected.

For those that are ailing remove all feed and water for 12 hours. Then give fresh water with one tablespoon of baking soda added for each pig. Six hours later give a small amount of chop and milk, adding one cupful of raw linseed oil for each three pigs. Continue feeding in this way for three or four days and then gradually return to the usual ration, adding fortified fish oil, alfalfa meal, or alfalfa hay.

Alberta Not So Good Re Sale of War Stamps

Word has come from the Alberta War Finance Office that as regards the sale of war stamps and certificates, Alberta has fallen behind the other provinces of the Dominion. Therefore in order that Alberta should have a better showing among the provinces a special drive is being made for the sale of stamps and certificates for the next few months.

Here at Tofield the I.O.D.E. will have charge of the sale of stamps and they have been asked to sell $230.00 worth of stamps per month. This is really going to town as far as a quota is concerned and pretty nearly everybody will have to buy some stamps if the monthly quota is to be reached.

No doubt the I.O.D.E. will think up some original and painless way of extracting the quarter from your pocket, but then there is no safer investment anywhere than a war saving certificate.

THE NEW YEAR

A flower unblown; a book unread;
A tree with fruit unharvested;
A path untrod; a house whose rooms
Lack yet the heart's divine perfumes;
A landscape whose wide border lies
In silent shade 'neath silent skies.
A wondrous fountain yet unsealed;
A casket with its gifts concealed—
This is the Year that for you waits
Beyond to-morrow's mystic gates.

TO THE NEW YEAR

By Edna Jaques

The bells are ringing now—how silver clear
They toll the sober passing of the year—
I count the strokes, and lean far out [illegible]
The purple shadows of the chestnut tree,
And God seems near, as if He listened too,
Sighing for days gone by—as women [illegible]

And though the year has held its meed of woe,
There has been sunshine always near, you know.
Dear golden moments, when I seemed to see
Life holding out warm tender hands to me.
And felt the unseen pulse of beauty beat
Like silver trumpets on a quiet street.

And so the bells ring out against the sky
Breathing of faith and love that will not die.
A New Year coming to us silver-shod,
All fair and shining from the hand of God
Oh, may we use it to Thy joy and praise
Walking in peace and love, its hidden ways.

IT'S ABOUT CURLERS!

The Curling season's here again, or, so it would appear;
You only have to use your eye,
Or exercise your ear,
To know the change that's taking place
Among the curling boys;
They talk about their curling rocks
As children talk of toys;
They're trying out the curling [illegible]
The action of the knee,
The older chaps seem pretty stiff,
I'll say, if you ask me;
They balance last year's curling brooms,
At least what's left of them,
They even try a little stunt,
Of sweeping if you please;
They're taking out their curling [illegible]
To have them nicely aired;
Their trousers too are overhauled and some have been repaired;
You see them walking down the street,
A sniffing at the air,
Their faces brighten with a smile
When curling frost is there;
You hear them talking to themselves
You ask, "What's that you say?"
Somewhat confused they come to life,
"Eh!"— "Ah!"— "A lovely day."
They've never passed the curling rink
Between last year and now,
But now, the shortest way to home
Is past that rink, somehow;
Subdued emotions, memories
Of games that they have played,
Are playing tag in curling minds,
And firm resolves are made;
"In turn," and "Out turn" are reviewed,
You think they'll miss the tee?
Just once, that may occur to them,
Or, never more than twice;
That steady, forward, earnest look
Eye training it must be,
They're quietly getting into shape
For curling, don't you see?
And so, the curling days have come,
The brightest of the year,
When curling rocks, and curling brooms,
And curling togs appear;
When curlers young and curlers old
Are heading to the rink:
The brightest days of all the year
Are curling days, I think.
—A Guy Curling.

NEW DELHI—India's Forest Services have made great contributions to the war effort. The Utilization Branch, apart from producing innumerable wooden articles as substitutes for metal to pack ordnance stores, has solved among dozens of other problems, the difficult one of producing quickly enough boot lasts to supply the enormous Army demand for boots. The Chemistry Branch has installed an organization for extracting creosote from pine wood; a material has been found for what is called creaming rubber latex and another material for sizing textiles for which the military demand is enormous. In fact, dozens of things have been produced from minor forest products, ranging from substitutes for rubber to wax for copying paper for typewriters. The Entomologist Branch is another which is contributing valuable services. It continually advises the Ordnance Department on how to protect its timber against the ravages of insects so that it is no longer the case that shipments arrive at their destination as dust and not timber as they did at the beginning of this war. The Chemistry, Utilization and Entomology Branches are doing practically nothing but war problems, and have already provided many supplies which have ceased to come from outside India on account of the war.

Income tax interests everyone. The new T-1 Special Form for those whose income in 1943 didn't top $3,000 is simpler; above that bracket it is a little more complicated. The T-1 Special is 4-pages as before but the last two are taken up with showing you tables on various incomes, etc. There are 17 main questions to be answered instead of 14, and you won't be confused this time by that 50 per cent remission of tax due because of the "pay-as-you-earn plan."

Some interesting figures are revealed on women employment in Canada and we mean figures literally. Women empoyed in our industries increased by 70,000 over the past twelve months, a total of 510,715; the increase in males in employment was less than a thousand; at October 1, 1943, 237,251 women were in manufacturing; 90,236 in trade, 32,966 in finance and 96,810 in services. Communications, transportation, construction, mining and logging together accounted for about 34,430, or only 7.07 per cent of the total. Ontario and Quebec, of course were first and second in number employed. Largest increases in number of females at work were shown by British Columbia with a rise of 34.5 per cent and by Alberta where a 30.2 per cent increase was indicated over 1942.

The Consumer Branch, Wartime Prices and Trade Board, suggests the following New Year's resolutions for every home in Canada: 1. Pay no higher than ceiling prices. 2. Buy only what is absolutely necessary. 3. Buy only for immediate use. 4. Observe all rationing regulations strictly. 5. Re-make and make do to save buying new. 6. Waste nothing. 7. Don't be a rumour-monger—check harmful rumours. 8. Buy more Victory Bonds and War Savings Certificates.

In the armed forces, CWAC's may now carry a suitcase or club bag when travelling individually. To get wounded Canadian soldiers to hospital quickly, supply trucks can be pressed into emergency service as ambulances, special sets of harness now are being manufactured in Canada to provide carriage for stretchers. Soldiers in Italy temporarily relieved from front line duties now get a chance to go on Auxiliary conducted tours, see famous places, hear Italian operas, see a variety of sculpture, paintings. The boys are going to see films of the 1943 World's baseball series.

R C M P made a nation wide check up of men throughout Canada recently in connection with mobilization regulations, in poolrooms, beer parlors and similar places. The Labor Department now reveals that 209,972 men were questioned, 2,701 detained temporarily. Of this number 304 were charged in court with attempting to evade military call-up; 164 with failure to notify change of address etc., while 105 deserters were nabbed; 862 found without gainful occupation were referred to Selective Service officers.

In future a farmer cannot apply for new machinery to replace used which he has sold, until he has filed a statement describing the used machinery, and reasons why he has sold it. He must also get a notice from the WPTB Board's representative that his application will be approved, —if the desired equipment is available.

Many of us think of India as a vague place related to Canada, but do you know that reports of Canadian products to British India this year aggregated about $126,000,000 as compared with $6,106,000 in 1939, and that we stand fifth among all sources of her imports? We sold them mostly motor vehicles and parts, metals, tea chest materials, newsprint, calcium carbide, etc. From India we are getting tea and gunny cloth mainly, also some crome ore, peanut oil, castor oil, shellac and skins.

Of interest to farmers: Breathing of potatoes during steady cold weather is very low, so it is suggested all ventilators and doors in buildings used for winter storage of seed spuds be closed and well protected to prevent freezing. Never overfeed is one of the principle rules for feeding dairy cattle, but feed according to the individual needs and desires of each animal, and there should be regularity in hours of feeding and character of food. Hay with a moisture content of about 25 per cent has a tendency to discolor and become dusty in the bales. A survey is to be made of manpower needs on Canadian dairy farms in an effort to increase production of dairy products, but in the campaign to have farm workers take other seasonal work care is being taken not to interfere with year-round workers on dairy farms.

A ceiling price has been put on used bags, bagging and baling material. If a dealer sells a mixed lot of used bags he must take the maximum price allowed for the lowest priced bags as fixed by the order, multiplied by the total number of used bags in the lot.

According to government authorities the clothing industry is "over the top" in its big job of making clothing for Canada's fighting services and helping other United Nations, too, but they cannot promise civilians that they will notice much change in their supply situation, yet.

At the Dominion Experimental station at Scott, Sask., feed records showed 1067 lbs. of grain is required per pig marketed, this including feed for sow for 12 months and is for one litter of seven piglets per year. That amount represents, to grow each pig, 19.1 bus. wheat, 22.6 bus. barley or 32 bus. oats. To determine value of these grains, marketed through hogs, the number of bushels required is divided into the returns of $24.50 giving the following values as pig feed. Wheat $1.24 per bushel; oats 76c per bushel and barley $1.07 per bushel.

OF THINGS TO COME

Citizens interested in the problems of reconstruction will want to hear the series of radio programmes entitled "Of Things To Come", being presented every Tuesday evening over the CBC National Network. Dealing with the general subject, Canada in the Post-War World, the broadcasts are designed to stimulate discussion by groups of people organized into Citizens' Forums. Study bulletins to accompany each broadcast have been prepared by the Canadian Association for Adult Education. After meeting to discuss the topic of the evening, groups are asked to report their opinions to the provincial office, which in Alberta is the University Department of Extension. The programmes are heard from 9:00 to 9:30 p.m. every Tuesday over the following stations: CKUA, Edmonton; CJCA, Edmonton; CJCJ, Calgary; and CBK, Watrous. Persons who are interested in forming listening groups may secure further information by writing the Department of Extension, University of Alberta, Edmonton.

NOT WORTH IT!

A farmer in great need of more help at haying time finally asked Si Warren, a town character, if he could help him out.

"What'll you pay?" demanded Si.

"I'll pay you what you're worth," answered the farmer.

Si scratched his head for a minute and then answered decisively:

"I'll be durned if I'll work for that!" —The American Agriculturist.

AVOID USE OLD STRAW FOR HOG BEDDING

Every winter there are always a number of reports of pneumonia losses in swine which have been housed where they have been bedded on old, dry, partially pulverized straw. Veterinary authorities point out that hogs sleeping with their noses resting on such bedding, inhale the dry straw dust, causing an irritation of the lungs which may bring on pneumonia. Drafty quarters, insanitary conditions and improper ventilation contribute further to the problem. The best preventatives are to maintain clean, fresh bedding, and quarters which are warm and free from drafts.

SHORT COURSES, REPAIR OF TRACTORS & FARM MACHINERY

The Department of Agriculture announces that the three weeks schools for young men on the farm in the repair of farm machinery which were held at several points last winter, will be continued this year. Arrangements have been made for at least eight such schools, the series to commence at Lloydminster on Monday, January 10th. They are made available through Schedule "E" of the Dominion-Alberta Youth Training Program, cost of instruction being shared by the Provincial and Dominion Governments.

Owing to wartime restrictions on the manufacture of tractors and other lines of farm machinery, there is a definite limit to the amount of new equipment available to farmers. As a consequence it is essential that the equipment now in use on Alberta farms shall give the maximum service; and in order to do this it must be kept in the best possible state of repair. These repair schools will help to meet this emergency in districts where power farming is extensively followed.

Regulations of the Youth Training program provide for the admittance of farm boys and young farmers between the ages of 16 and 30 years inclusive, and local groups are limited to a number that may be supervised by one instructor. The availability of competent instructors is a definite factor in determining the number of schools that may eventually be held.

The course of training includes the overhaul of tractors and gas engines of various types, and shop work in the simpler repairs of farm implements. Instruction is also given in the operation, adjustment and care of all lines of farm machinery, keeping in mind farming methods most suitable to the district.

The complete schedule of points where schools will be held this winter is not yet fully decided, and will be announced at a later date. In the meantime further particulars may be obtained from the Supervisor of Junior Activities, Department of Agriculture, Edmonton.

HOLD YOUR VICTORY BONDS

(Patriotic Appeal)

Mr. Ilsley has recently released figures covering Bond purchases in the Fifth Victory Loan campaign. Patriotism has been shown in acquiring these Bonds, so it is of utmost importance that they be retained by the purchasers.

The money which you have invested is used in innumerable ways which make it possible to retain our democratic way of life. It provides ammunition for our fighting sons and brothers with which to protect their lives and ours. It provides clothing and food as well as the implements of war; it provides credit which makes it possible for Canadians to take their rightful place in the markets of the world.

In totalitarian states, you are not asked to invest your spare dollars. They are taken from you at will and you are given no assurance that you will ever get them back, whereas in Canada, all the resources of the land are pledged as the Nations BOND to return your money—with interest—when it has served the purpose for which it was invested.

When you hold your Bonds for maturity, you are also making your dollars fight for you on the HOME FRONT—inflation is one of the most formidable enemies here. The equal distribution of necessities of life is being controlled to a greater extent in Canada than almost any other warring nation. This is largely due to the fact that the majority are behind the war effort, not only lending their dollars, but also the lives of their loved ones. Your Bond dollars help to maintain the level of life which we are enabled to live. Withdraw them and contribute to inflation—withdraw the assistance of your fighting sons and brothers and contribute to defeat. In short—HOLD

To meet this need every pig possible will be needed and more sows should be bred now.

Practical trials on a wide scale show that under farm conditions and with good management a pig can be raised to 200 lbs. (150 lb. carcass) on an equivalent of 1000 lbs. of barley or wheat. This includes the sow's feed.

After making a liberal allowance for other costs, such as interest, depreciation and labour, the net returns on grain fed to hogs under good management, should not be less than the amount shown below.

ROLL OF HONOR—

SINCE THE WAR COMMENCED a large number of boys and girls have left this district for service with one of the armed forces. In the early stages of the war different organizations attempted to keep track of the names of those who enlisted, but after a time the exodus became so general and covered such a wide area that it was almost impossible for any one organization to keep a list of names anything like accurate. First there was the problem of choosing a definite area and then the problem of keeping the list up to date.

The general public may not be aware that there is available for those who request it, a well prepared and decorated honor roll and this can be obtained in varying sizes to accomodate any number of names up to 600. It is expected that names would be lettered in and the roll added to until such time as peace was proclaimed. The roll may be obtained by responsible organizations free of charge from a government department at Ottawa.

It has occurred to us that innasmuch as the M.D. of Beaver has definite boundaries and is the recognized local governing body, that it sometime in the near future undertake to have an honor roll made of all those men and women who are serving their country in one of the services. A roll prepared by the M.D. of course, could or could not properly include the names of those who enlisted from other incorporated areas, such as towns and villages. We would like to see one large, complete roll, but civic pride on the part of towns and villages might create a demand to have their own roll of honor.

As a newspaper, we have often during the past year or so wished we had such a list, and with the commencement of a new year we feel the time is ripe to make an attempt to procure one. This newspaper covers the west half of the municipality and goes into most of the homes within that area. A complete list cannot be procured without the assistance of the relatives of the men and women who have enlisted, so as a preliminary move to procure a somewhat accurate list from the area covered by this paper, we would ask those interested if they would send in the names of enlisted personnel from their own or nearby homes. If the following simple rules are observed it should be possible to avoid repeats and omissions. The information required would be to give full name, whether of the navy, army or airforce, the year of enlistment and post office address when enlisting. As promotions occur and ranks change with the passing of time it is not necessary to give the rank. What we would like to get now is the full name, particular service, year of enlistment, and post office address at time of enlistment of all enlisted personnel who went from within the present boundaries of M.D. of Beaver. If and when these names come in, they will be carefully filed and the list published from time to time.

CHARLES MUNTON—

THE DROP OF THE HAMMER occurred for Charles Munton at seven o'clock Tuesday morning and with its dropping there passed from the scene of Edmonton Auction Marts a colorful figure and an auctioneer who sold with a definite individualistic style. He could pass from selling a most insignificant article for a dime to selling a team of horses valued at a hundred or more dollars without the least outward sign that values had changed.

Though not of this district there probably are few farmers within a fifty mile area of Edmonton who have not seen him sell or at least read his public announcements, and while as the classified section of the Edmonton dailies persistently reminded people "Munton Buys Anything," he also sold anything. It is authoritively reported that he has sold more horses than anyone in the west. Certainly he sold a large number of them and was a past master in the horse sale ring.

To those possessing powers of observation an auction sale can be and most often is an assembly of much interest. There you can see human generosity, cheapness, indecision and boldness brought out in a remarkable degree. And if at anytime you should feel that you have adequately sized up all these things, you had better look again, there is probably something you have missed. Certainly an auction sale crowd, particularly a city one, is rarely without interest.

Almost any Saturday of the year at a spot banked by the rather imposing and contrasting building of the Edmonton City Hall, Charles Munton would be found selling from his kiosk (a fancy name). The articles were of a bewildering variety and there always seemed to be somebody willing to bid. Rarely were articles cast aside even if to some observers they appeared worthless. Charles Munton could sell fast and he could play for time. He could express surprise and astonishment at the crowd's inability to see the value of an article which frequently brought forth another bid. Occasionally he would be stumped, such as the time when he sold a furnace pot and other fittings for 25c.

Mr. Munton could be stern and let out a roar on occasion as he did one hot Saturday. He had sold the small stuff and horses and was turning to the furniture. There were two single beds upon which a number of ladies were sitting. He politely asked the ladies to stand and asked his two helpers to move the beds back. But before the helpers could do so the ladies had sat down again. A few minutes later, coming over in that direction, Mr. Munton let out a roar "Ladies, Ladies!" The ladies jumped up as if shot and he then turned his attention to his helpers and in none too polite language made it known he wanted those beds moved back. The helpers became excited and one went to the foot of one bed and the other to the head of the other bed and both lifted. Then seeing their mistake, they both hastily changed over and lifted again. It could not have been rehearsed better for a pantomime.

But he could be gentle too. There was the time when he sold the "singing" canary. "Oh," he said, as if it was the most precious thing in the world, "a little singing canary." And the way he said "Oh" and the expression on his face when he looked at the bird, held the crowd breathless.

However, we will probably remember him best as selling a saw—any saw. It would not make any difference whether it was a rip-saw, buck saw or just ordinary hand saw, while he was calling for bids he apparently would be sawing for all he was worth. Shoulders hunched, face working, the 2x6 in front of him was apparently being cut in two, but it never was. This play alone probably brought more additional 25c bids than any other.

And so, while Charles Munton was not of this district, there are many residents in the west half of Beaver who knew of him and who will bear with some regret of his passing.

When I was but a little lad,
My Mother cared for me.
She knew the troubles that I had
She saw the things that I couldn't see.

When I became an older boy
And longed the world to see;
I bethought me of my mother's joy,
Remembered that she cared for me.

When to a man's estate I grew,
And felt that I was free;
'Twas then that I first really knew,
How much she cared for me.

She seemed somehow, I mind, to read
Before my thoughts were spoken.
She knew the things that I would need,
Without a sigh or token.

She didn't chide, rebuke or scold
Me for the wrong I'd done,
But took me by the hand and told
The course I might have run.

She always made me understand
The kind of life she wanted,
'Twasn't like her to demand,
But her wish my memory haunted.

I knew in after life, the meaning
Of the things she often said,
When upon her bosom leaning,
I would rest my weary head.

The things she told me then
Have stayed with me always,
I think of them so often,
When I'm tempted by the ways.

'Twas just like a mother's love you say:
Just as common as a common clod;
But when I kneel me down to pray,
It forms a link 'twixt me and God.

When I tell Him of the needs,
That I could tell to just one other,
I know He hears me and He heeds:
He the God of Sainted Mother.

I'm learning now the faith she had
In some Diviner power,
To care for me when but a lad,
And when a man in danger's hour.

She knew she couldn't always be Close by to guard my way.
"Give him his duty plain to see,"
I've heard my mother often pray.

In duty's path I try to walk,
That I may answer mother's prayer,
And to her God I sometimes talk,
That He may show me when and where.

LONDON: Flanders poppies which were sold in Great Britain on Armistice Day this year were made on "austerity" lines. CANNED SALMON IS RATIONED

Ottawa, January 10 — Canned salmon will join the list of rationed commodities on and after January 17, the ration administration, Wartime Prices and Trade Board announces.

Rarely seen on the civilian market during the past two years, now about 200,000 cases of canned salmon are being released, but to assure fair distribution, under rationing order.

Brown meat coupons will be used to purchase canned salmon, each coupon being good for a quarter pound of the fish. The canned salmon available will be packed in quarter, half and one pound tins, the Board announces.

ALFALFA AS A PROTEIN SUPPLEMENT

(Experimental Farms News)

The increase which has taken place in livestock and poultry production in Canada in the past few years has resulted in increased demand for protein supplements. At the same time there has been a shortage of these supplements.

Fortunately there are many vegetable proteins which can be successfully produced on most farms, and of these, alfalfa is probably the best, if it is cut at the right stage and properly cured, states A. G. Kusch, Dominion Experimental Station, Scott, Sask.

Because of its high protein content, nearly on a par with wheat bran, alfalfa assumes a position of importance more than ever before. It is not only rich in digestible protein, but contains appreciable amounts of vitamins for young growing animals.

Alfalfa thrives on almost any kind of soil that has good drainage and is not too arid. It seems to do especially well on the lighter loams and sandy soils in north-central Saskatchewan.

Used as a green pasture during the summer months, alfalfa is not only a valuable source of protein, but also supplies necessary minerals and vitamins. As hay it is also a valuable source of protein, but care should be taken in harvesting to retain as much of the protein content as possible. When cut before bloom, and properly cured, alfalfa hay contains about 14 per cent digestible protein; when cut about mid-bloom, the protein content drops to about 11 per cent; and drops still further, to about 10 per cent if cut when about three-quarters of the plants are in bloom. It has also been determined that the leaves contain about 22 per cent and the stems only 10 per cent of the digestible protein.

Bearing these points in mind, it would appear that the best time to cut alfalfa for hay in order to retain as much protein as possible, consistent with yield, is at the commencement of bloom. Besides, early cutting will improve the prospects of a second crop.

Since the leaves contain considerably more protein than the stems, it is desirable that as much of the leaf as possible be retained. This not only means cutting in a young stage but entails special care with haying operations. The hay should be only partially cured in the swath before raking into windrows for completion of curing. The use of equipment which harvests from the windrow and cuts down on handling is desirable for avoiding loss of leaf.

United Church News

The Annual Congregational meeting will be held on Monday, January 17th at 8 p.m. This is always an interesting gathering. Members and adherents are cordially invited. The activities of the church and all its organizations are reviewed and discussed. Come along and show your interest in the church that has given 60 years of continuous service in Tofield and district. We expect a good representation from Ketchamoot and Lakeshore also.

A social half hour will be held at the close.

SUNDAY, 16th JANUARY

Lakeshore	1 30 p m
Tofield	7 30 p m
Sunday School	11 00 a m

The Annual Congregational meeting of the Ketchamoot United Church was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Appleby on Wednesday, January 12th. The meeting began with dinner at 1 p m. There were a large number of members and adherents present. After a sumptuous repast, the Ladies' Aid held a short session, and immediately afterward, the Rev. D K. Allan presided. We were sorry that Mr. Mitchell, secretary-treasurer could not be present. His report was read by Mrs. Peter Lee.

The Church had met all its financial obligations with a balance over.

The fine feature of this report was that it revealed more people were giving regularly to the work of the church.

The Ladies' Aid report, read by Mrs. Sears showed continued enthusiasm and interest. The ladies raised in the neighborhood of $200 during the year. While assisting the Board of Stewards they gave donations to the M & M Fund, the Conference Fund, the W M S. and also for the interior decoration of the church in Tofield. This report is always well received.

A substantial balance was left to begin the work of 1944.

It should be mentioned also that through the Annual picnic, the sum of $50 was raised for the Red Cross.

The work of the church at Lakeshore and Ketchamoot is going along encouragingly and harmoniously.

ALBERTA CHEESE WINS HIGH AWARDS AT BRITISH EMPIRE CHEESE EXHIBITION

Alberta is fast becoming a serious competitor of Ontario in the matter of quality cheddar cheese, as evidenced by the results in the cheese classes at the British Empire Cheese Exhibition held in Belleville, Ontario, December 2nd, 3rd and 4th, 1943.

The Rosemary Co-op Cheese Factory, Rosemary, the only Alberta exhibitor was successful in winning the following prizes: First prize for October cheese in the Dominion class (Ontario excluded); Fourth prize for October cheese (open to all provinces; and Sixth prize for September cheese in the Dominion class (Ontario excluded).

As there were 243 entries in the various classes, the milk patrons of the Rosemary district and the cheesemaker, John Olsen, are to be congratulated on the splendid showing that they have made for their factory and for the Alberta cheese industry.

J. W. McMULLEN,

1944 Centenary Of Rochdale Pioneers

By Most Rev. J.C. McGuigan, Archbishop of Toronto

1944 is the centenary year of the Rochdale Pioneers and they deserve world-wide celebration. These 28 poor textile workers who opened their little store hit upon one of the most successful economic experiments in the modern world. Consumers' co-operation is a major factor in the life of Britain and it has contributed perhaps more than anything else to working-class welfare and social stability in a country where the problems of industrialism have been presented on the largest scale.

In other countries producers' co-operation has made more progress. The co-operative dairy and bacon factory are even more significant than the co-operative store in Britain. Different countries have their own characteristic forms of co-operation. From pioneer days in Canada we inherit traditions of the barn-raisings, threshing bees and beef-rings. A Canadian Alphonse Desjardins of Levis, Que. is revered as the founder of the Credit Union movement in North America. In recent years the Antigonish movement which stands for the twin ideals of economic co-operation and adult education has attracted world-wide attention.

Yet we must recognize that co-operation is only a subordinate economic factor in Canada today. Giant corporations directed by the profit motive dominate the scene and governmentalism is most often advocated as the necessary counterpoise. Competition is lauded on the one side and State control on the other. There is real danger of the threat of one kind of economic dictatorship leading to the establishment of another.

What should be realized is that the spirit of co-operation, which means seeking our own good in harmony with that of our fellows, is more important than any of its particular forms. Besides consumers' co-operative and producers' co-operative there should be co-operation between employers and employees and there might well be very beneficial co-operation between small retail and other businesses.

The Church gives her special favour to economic action on co-operative lines. This is expressed in the Declaration by the Canadian Hierarchy published in October last. The Pope himself has expressed his approbation of the Antigonish Movement and that movement owes much to the leadership it has received from Ministers of religion, Protestant as well as Catholic. Cardinal Villeneuve recently attended the Congress of the Superior Council of Co-operatives for the Province of Quebec and said that co-operation was the system which could break, without violence, economic dictatorship. As co-operation is a spirit more than a form it allows for a great variety of forms of private business. It seeks no monopoly and it makes democracy real by extending it from the political to the economic sphere.

ANNOUNCE PRICES FOR EXPORT EGGS

The Special Products Board has announced the price the Board will pay for all shell eggs that can be made available for export to Britain throughout 1944. These prices on a per dozen basis are for Grade A large eggs in carload lots at the shipping points named: Halifax, Quebec City, and Montreal 35 1-2 cents; Toronto, 35; Winnipeg, 34 1-2; Regina, 34; Calgary and Edmonton 33 1-2 and Vancouver 33 cents.

The price of Grade A Medium will be 2 cents below A Large; Grade B, 5 cents below A Large; Grade A Pullets, 8 cents below A Large.

The Board points out that the 1944 prices are those to be paid during the whole of 1944. In 1943 prices quoted for eggs for Britain were on a monthly basis, according to seasonal variations. All eggs bought by the Special Products Board are dried and shipped in the form of dried egg powder in 14 lb. cartons for the restaurant trade and for use by the armed forces, and in 5 ounce packets suitable for household or family use.

Car Licenses Cut Plan On Program

Reduction of motor car licenses, which is being advocated by the Alberta Motor Association, is expected to be one of the main subjects for discussion at the caucus of Social Credit members which has been called for Feb 8 and 9. This is the usual pre-sessional caucus, as the house will open on Feb. 10.

Following up the resolution passed at the annual meeting of the A M A. in Calgary last month, officials will make further representations to the government concerning the urgency of lowered scale of motor licenses.

Undoubtedly there is some desire in government quarters, at least among the rural members, to see that car licenses are lowered. It has been pointed out time and again that the condition of the highways and federal restrictions on gasoline and tire supplies, form every warrant for car licenses being reduced to a nominal sum.

When the government rejected the A M.A.'s request last year for refunds of the 1943 licenses, it was indicated that sympathetic consideration would be given the question of reducing licenses when the 1944 budget was being prepared.

The budget soon will be in course of preparation and the A. M.A. is continuing to press for a cut in car licenses.

FARM PAPER CATERS TO HOME DRESS MAKERS

Home dressmaking, the art of "making over, making do, and using what you have", is today practised extensively in Canadian homes---for, in wartime, it is both patriotic and economical to "make your own things."

For some women, the making of things at home began with sewing for the Red Cross, later developing into the making of simple household articles and clothing for the family. Most rural women always have made some of their own and their children's things, but, today, many are making almost all garments.

It is not surprising, therefore, that the Family Herald and Weekly Star reports it is now furnishing more readers with patterns than at any time in its seventy-four years of service. During 1943, over 100,000 orders for dress patterns, crochet and embroidery patterns, etc. were filled.

In offering a wide variety of patterns at nominal cost, the Family Herald not only helps thousands of housewives meet their wartime budget, but enables them to convert household remnants and the family's old, discarded garments into precious articles of clothing, many of which cannot today be bought. Add to the Family Herald's Pattern Offers the practical dressmaking information given in its Women's Pages, the healthful recipes, the timely, economical wartime helps, and there you have sound reasons for the Family Herald's continued popularity in over 800,000 Canadian homes.

PLACE ORDERS NOW FOR PACKAGE BEES

The importation into Canada of package bees from the Southern States is an important feature of Canadian beekeeping, and so great has the demand become that it is necessary early in the winter for beekeepers in Canada to estimate their requirements for the spring and place orders immediately. Otherwise it will be found that the Southern shippers are fully booked up with orders long before the spring has arrived.

There are about 5,000 bees in a pound, and they may be obtained in packages weighing one-pound or more. The two-pound size appears to be the most popular for all purposes, although many beekeepers prefer the three-pound size, especially if they are living in regions where the main honey flow comes early in the season and is of short duration. Also, if bees arrive late in the spring, three-pound packages are often useful. Unless otherwise ordered, a young queen, enclosed in a small cage, will be found in each package.

When making out the order for bees, C. B. Gooderham, Dominion Apiarist, advises that care be taken to state definitely the size and number of packages required, and whether or not queens are to be included. Also the approximate date on which the bees are expected to arrive should be stated. When ordering, ask the shipper to forward copies of the invoice in advance of the bees. These copies should be sent to the nearest Customs officer, explaining to him the perishable nature of the shipment and that immediate delivery is imperative. At the same time the express agent nearest the Customs office should be advised that a shipment of bees is expected on or about a certain date and giving him authority to release the bees from Customs so that delivery will not be delayed. These precautions are mainly for beekeepers living long distances from Customs centres. Also to prevent further delay arrangements should be made to pay the Exchange War Tax of 10 per cent promptly.

Further information may be found in the Wartime Pamphlet No. 8, "Package Bees", a copy of which may be obtained by writing to Dominion Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Registration Of Beekeepers

Permits for the purchase of sugar for feeding bees can be issued only to those beekeepers who have registered with the Provincial Department of Agriculture. This registration is required every year and application forms have been mailed already to those who are on record with the Provincial Apiarist.

Registration is necessary to ensure the best results from the inspection work conducted by the Department for the assistance of beekeepers. Those who have not received an application form should write immediately to W. G. le Maistre, Provincial Apiarist, Department of Agriculture, Edmonton.

Since honey is a rationed commodity the Wartime Prices and Trade Board requires that all beekeepers be registered with their local board.

Nearly 92,000 Car Licenses In Alberta

Motor car licenses issued in Alberta since the opening of the license year on April 1 have reached a total of 91,225 which is only slightly less than the total for the previous year, according to official information received by the Alberta Motor Association.

It is apparent that the big decrease in revenue which the provincial government expected has failed to materialize. While motor revenues have been maintained at practically the same level as in the previous year, this has not been matched in highway improvements, according to A.M.A.

Officials say that every effort will be made to induce the government to make larger highway expenditures this year. Roads in many parts of the province are in bad condition and when the province is in such good financial condition as it is, there is every warrant for larger outlays, not only on main but also on connecting highways.

Strong representations will be made by the A M A to ensure that bigger highway appropriations will be provided at the forthcoming session of the legislature.

BOY SCOUT GOOD TURN

A story illustrating the spirit of brotherhood in the Boy Scout Movement comes from Rosalind, Alberta, where James Miner, 16 year old Scout was injured in a shooting accident. When he left Camrose Hospital recently with his foot in a cast, two brother Scouts purchased him a pair of crutches and another Scout, from his summer holiday earnings, paid part of his hospital bill.

BOY SCOUT SAVES LIFE

Four year old Jean McInnis of Yarmouth, N S., owes her life to the presence of mind of 11 year old Peter Campbell, a Boy Scout, who rescued her when she fell into deep water from the docks.

WEDDING

(Editors Note: The bride was raised and went to school here at Tofield.)

(Aklavik News)

Saturday, November 20th, Aklavik was electrified to see the following notice posted in the stores (our wallnewspaper): Everybody welcome to the wedding of A. Audienko and F. B. Henley on Monday Nov. 22, at the Anglican church at 3 p.m. and dance at Peffers in the evening, 9-1:30 a.m.

Thanks to the storm clearing, the sun shining and the temperature hovering around 30 below, all Aklavik flocked to the lovely All Saints Mission Church in happy mood. Just at sunset, with the organ playing softly, the bride and groom, attended by Pauline Audienko and Const. Cotterell (R.C.M.P.), followed Canon H. Shepherd between rows of lighted candles to the altar and were united by the beautiful Anglican service.

As they left the church doors they were showered with confetti and had to hold an impromptu reception as their friends, white and native, crowded round with all good wishes. They even braved the cold without coats so that camera-armed friends could get pictures.

The town taxi, a big caboose drawn by a tractor, awaited them. In another shower of confetti they mounted to their chairs on the taxi, wedding guests sat around on the sled and in place of the customary old shoes and tin cans, all the small boys stood on the runners. Thus they proceeded to the Bay house to receive their intimate friends, regaling them with wedding cake and other refreshments.

The wedding cake, a three tiered one, was baked by Mrs. S. Shepherd and beautifully decorated in white festoons and roses with silver centers by Miss Kitty Searle. The Sisters of Charity also gave Anne a wedding cake, two tiers, garlanded with ribbons and roses of colored frosting on a white background and topped with a wee bride and groom (train and top hat and all) standing under an arch wreathed with more roses and ribbons. So numerous were the callers that they were a bit late to their wedding dance, but their guests were in such a happy mood they did not mind. Where the couple got time to attend the lovely wedding dinner given the bridal party by the Norrises, this scribe does not know. But they did partake amply of the delicious dinner set out on a glistening new linen table cloth. Pictures of the dinner party were taken for proof and happy memories.

The bride was lovely in a dark blue tailored suit with white pin stripes, a white blouse and black off-the-face hat. The bridesmaid, sister of the bride, wore a gray dressmaker suit and black tam hat. Both had rosebud buttonieres. The groom and best man wore dark business suits. Constables Tait and Sullivan, seeing the unexpectedly numerous wedding guests, acted as ushers. Christmas colors of red and [illegible] prevailed in the decorations at the dance and little clusters of red bells frosted in white were suspended among the streamers on the ceiling. Mr. Frank McCauley contributed his big radio to amplify the phonograph for dancing; natives played violin and guitar for the square dances, jigs and reels, in which the natives do special honor to a dance.

The guests patiently waited for the bride and groom to have the first dance together; then filled the floor. Cigarettes, cigars and candy were passed by the wedding attendants at intervals and at midnight a delicious lunch of sandwiches, doughnuts, cake and coffee were served by Mrs. Norris, with the assistance of her daughters, Mrs. Pulk and wedding attendants.

Just before Home Sweet Home was played the guests joined hands, after Aklavik custom, in a circle around the couple and sang Auld Lang Syne and For They Are Jolly Good Fellows. Ending with three times three rousing cheers, to which the groom replied in a very apt speech of friendship and thanks. And after the last dance the bride and groom slipped away to their much decorated room at Peffer's.

Mr. K. Lang made amends for getting into town too late for the wedding by inviting the bridal couple to spend the rest of the week honeymooning at his cabin 24 miles out of Aklavik on the Peel River. The trip was made by dog team, not taxi.

The next Monday the bride was back on her job as housekeeper for the Bay boys, and the groom, having more time off, was busy moving supplies to their new home on the Livingstone farm. That evening Anne even went to Red Cross meeting, with a merry twinkle in her eye at surprising us so. She had spent a year and a half in Aklavik running Caribou Lodge. Freeman is second engineer on the HBC schooner Nigalik on the coast summers and stayed here last winter working for the Bay, so both are well known here and very well liked indeed. Their many friends showed their good wishes by lovely gifts, and a shower for the bride, held at the Bay house, Dec. 1. Their wedding will be a surprise to their friends Outside as well as here, for since it came during our 3 months without mail planes, only their immediate families were sent telegrams.

We are sure these Outside friends join us in wishing the best of everything to you, Freeman and Anne.

Council Urge Ratepayers To Order Grass Seed Early

So that the forage crop seed business may be done in an orderly manner and Council order from the Dept. of Agriculture the approximate amount required, ratepayers will be urged to order their grass seed requirements early. Seed will be sold by the Municipality at cost plus freight and both the Department and Council are desirous of seeing good use made of this offer. Orders will be received up to February 25th, this being the cut-off date, after which no more orders can be accepted. The above was decided at a meeting of M D of Beaver held at Ryley on Friday, January 14th. There were present at the meeting, Reeve Ovens, Councillors Anderson, Giebelhaus, Logan, Lucas, Moen and Swabey.

After formal passing of the minutes of the December meeting, Council proceeded with the business of the meeting as provided by the agenda.

NO EXTRA GRANT

Letter from Dept. of Public Works re highway north from Tofield. The M D had requested a special grant of $500.00 to maintain this road. The Dept. replied that all road grant money was available for construction only and none was allowed for maintenance.

SEASON'S GREETINGS

Letter from Bank of Montreal, Tofield extending seasonal greetings.

NEW NEWSPAPER TO BE PUBLISHED

Mr. Foran of Holden interviewed Council and said that arrangements were now complete to re-commence the publication of the Holden Newspaper. He said that the businessmen of Holden had promised one hundred per cent support and that it was proposed to get out a good paper. He asked Council whether the Holden newspaper would be given the same arrangement as the Tofield Mercury. The newspaper question was discussed at some length and it was the concensus of opinion that the newspaper arrangement had been a good one for both the ratepayers and council.

Mr. Worton was requested to explain the arrangement, which he did, by saying it was both simple and brief. One dollar per year per resident ratepayer, a report of the council meetings, publication of all necessary legal notices and financial statement in newspaper.

Mr. Foran said this was satisfactory.

On motion of Councillor Moen the same arrangement will be made with the Holden newspaper as with the Tofield newspaper.

Reeve Ovens said he would like the privilege of once again approaching Mr. Thunnel of the Viking News. He had approached him previously but at that time Mr. Thunnel did not wish to enter into any agreement with the M.D. It was understood the far eastern end of the M.D. would be served by the Viking News if Mr. Thunnel desired to enter into an arrangement with the M.D.

HOT OR COLD?

Letter from Union Tractor and Harvester Co., extending seasonal greetings and sending along a box of cigars and a number of framed pictures with thermometers enclosed.

MOTHERS' ALLOWANCE

Letters were received from the Mothers' Allowance Branch announcing increases to some recipients of this allowance.

EMERGENT RELIEF

Letter from City of Edmonton regarding emergency relief granted to a M.D. of Beaver resident. Council was not quite satisfied that issue of relief was justified but under the circumstances decided to pay the amount requested, $8.50, with the proviso that no more be granted the same resident without further instruction from the M.D. of Beaver.

HOSPITAL QUERIES

A number of hospital patient entries were announced and checked for residence eligibility.

INFORMATION RE CANCER TREATMENT

Communication from Dept. of Municipal Affairs regarding cancer treatment. Comment was made on the value and importance of this information.

POUND SALES

Statements of Mr. Ed. Thompson, pound-keeper, of three sales of impounded animals were read.

WAGE DISPUTE

Letter from Grant and Stewart re Morley Anderson was read. It will be remembered Mr. Morley Anderson was engaged to enlarge the M D. Office and in addition to his own time charges, charged 10 per cent on the amount paid to those whom he engaged to help him. Council was of the opinion that in paying Mr. Morley Anderson for his time and work according to agreement they had been fair and just. The reeve announced that he had engaged Mr. Anderson to do the work at $1.00 per hour. It was decided to adhere to the former decision of Council not to pay the additional 10 per cent and to engage legal service if suit was brought.

ROADWORK DIFFICULTIES

Brownlee, Baldwin and Brownlee wrote concerning the Zook vs. M.D. of Beaver dispute. This it will be remembered was in connection with some work done on a road without proper authorization by the former M D. of Beaver Lake. The letter asked for detailed information.

Letter from Sigurd Loferud, Viking, regarding Ole Kirkelund vs. Tina Anderson. Regarding this Councillor Logan moved that the Secretary be requested to write to the Clerk of Court, Edmonton, and find out what disposition was made of the land. Carried.

CONSOLIDATION BYLAW PASSED

Some tax problems came up for attention and arising out of these the following motion was made by Councillor Logan. That by-law allowing for consolidation of arrears of taxes for 1944 be passed. The by-law was given a first, second and third reading and unanimously passed.

MR. HAMILTON

Mr. Sam Hamilton, machinery salesman extraordinary, interviewed Council. He said he was pleased to meet the Council and thanked them for past favors. He had been 22 yrs. with Adams and hoped he would be the same staunch friend he had always been. He hoped to do business cleanly as in the past.

Mr. Hamilton then went on to explain that it will take two or three years to fully catch up with orders after the war but orders first in will be given first attention. Prices cannot be quoted as the W.T.P.T.B. will control prices for some time to come. He advised councillors to get in orders for stuff they know they will be needing. There were still motor graders available but not many elevator graders. Practically everything was diesel now.

Council was of the opinion that it was not ready to place an order for machinery at present.

OFFER REFUSED

Letter from Fennerty, Fennerty, Bessemer, etc. re taxes on N half, 11-49-15-W4. On the motion of Councillor Giebelhaus the offer of Fennerty, Fennerty, Bessemer, etc., was refused.

HAMLET OF POE

On the motion of Councillor Logan, lots 8 and 9 block 1 in the hamlet of Poe will be sold to Mr. H. W. Voight at $12.00 a lot. Mr. Voight, it was announced, intends to erect a dwelling.

On the motion of Councillor Logan, lots 15 and 16, block 1, hamlet of Poe will be sold to Mrs. T. Christensen at $12.00 per lot.

A bylaw covering the above two sales was given its 1st and 2nd reading.

Councillor Logan moved that we reserve lot 11, block 1, in the hamlet of Poe for municipal purposes. Carried.

SEEKING LAND

Mr. Bert Cornelius would like to buy S.W. quarter, 10-50-20, for $300.00. The land is assessed at $1000 00. Councillor Anderson was requested to look into this.

Mr. P. A. Reum wished to purchase S.W. 28-48-17 W4 and made an offer of $650.00, half cash. The land is assessed at $1850 00. It was stated the land was chiefly a hay quarter but it was understood the offer of $650.00 was not acceptable. Councillor Logan will look into this.

Mr. Ole Snortheim offered $2500 for two quarters of land, N.W. 16-48-17 and S.W. 21-48-17. The combined assessment was $4,130.00 and the arrears of taxes amounted to $2800.00. Councillor Logan was requested to investigate.

At the Variety Theatre on Saturday, January 22, at 8.00 p.m. sharp the National Film Board will give another of their popular free moving picture programs. For this coming Saturday four reels will be shown "Food as it Might Be," "Mites and Monsters," "Trees for Tomorrow", News Parade of 1943."

The attendance at these free shows makes a pleasant interlude and the films are sufficiently educational to increase one's store of general knowledge.

A WEEKLY EDITOR LOOKS AT Ottawa

Written specially for the weekly newspapers of Canada

By JIM GREENBLAT

Around Ottawa. They call it a poor snow season here, having had only 19 1-2 inches to the end of December, 28 inches behind last year's period. That's no fooling about more washing machines coming on the market for the J. H. Connor & Son Ltd. here started manufacture last week on a schedule allowing 15 per cent of normal peacetime production for January, February and March. Governor-General's levee on New Year's Day brought out about a thousand persons, the uniforms outnumbering civilians nine to one. Oddity—a small Christmas card came for the dog of the Polish minister to Canada from the pet cat of a U.S. official in Washington, doggone.

It's been moving time for the Ottawa headquarters staff of the Consumer Branch, with the entire staff moving into the Fraser building and the director, Byrne Hope Sanders, into an office in the new temporary building erected for the Wartime Prices and Trade Board just across from the Chateau Laurier hotel on Sussex street. It's two years since the Branch came into existence. During that time 12,000 Canadian women have enlisted as active officers while other hundreds of thousands have waged relentless war against higher prices. Housing registries operated under this Branch's supervision found homes for over 60,000 Canadians, and close to a thousand women sit on Local Ration Boards.

Some 6,207 members of the armed forces discharged from service were placed in employment by Selective Service in November, the total since April 1942 being 78,936, the Pensions' department reports. In the same period 62,960 veterans of the first Great War got the same service. These were not all permanent jobs of course but included occasional and seasonal jobs. Another interesting angle about the same subject is that unemployment assistance to pensioned vets of the First Great War hit an all-time low in November, 119 getting $2,180 as compared with say, August 1939, when 5,636 received $122,954.

The 1941 census figures now reveal some significant trends. In that year Canada had 174,767,609 acres of occupied farm land an increase of over eleven million acres from 1931. Improved farm land under crop was over 56 million acres, a reduction of two million, pasturage increased a little, summer fallow up about a third to 21,644,852. Nearly four million acres was the reduction in wood land from 1931 to 1941 while marsh or waste land was down over a million acres.

The war over in 1944? That would mean feeding Europe and quick

Given adequate ocean tonnage Europe need not go short of bread. The Dominion Bureau of Statistics says we would have 1,000,000,000 bushels, half of it in Canada available for shipment. The agricultural conference in Ottawa in December recommended no wheat acreage increase for Canada in 1944, regarding coarse grains, oil bearing seeds, peas, beans and corn as more urgent; also suggested a high proportion of land in Western Canada be summer fallowed which would be an asset if circumstances warranted increase in wheat acreage in 1945. Canada's peak wheat acreage was in 1940 with 28,726,000 acres, but in 1943 it dropped to 17,448,000 acres the objective set for this year.

Astronomic, we call it, the figures of cost of this war to Canadians. World War 1, including two years of demobilization, cost us $1,670 million. Compare that with the figures, up to the end of this fiscal year, estimated for the present war at $10,824 million. Total tax revenue for the 1914-18 fracas, including the demobilization years, was $1,121 million. For this war $7,300 million. In 1916 our population was around 8,140,000, today or rather 1941 it was put at 11,506,000.

This week (from Jan. 17 on) canned salmon is rationed and will be available on grocery shelves, packed in one-quarter, one-half and one pound tins, with valid meat coupons, already issued to be used on the ratio of one quarter pound salmon per coupon. Only a portion of the 1943 catch is available for civilian use, the WPTB deciding rationing to be the only equitable way of distribution. Other canned fish such as pilchard, tuna, herrings, and sardines are not rationed.

About two thousand of the 100,000 odd men discharged from our armed forces since the beginning of the war have enrolled for government sponsored university and vocational training courses. Of 850 who completed training, 780 found employment in industries for which they were trained. Men with honorable discharges have a choice of sixty courses.

Estimates of exports of Canadian foodstuffs for 1943 to all countries show why this country is doing such a tremendous share in the total war effort of the United Nations. Here are a few of the figures available, with 1938 figures in brackets for comparison: eggs, over 40 million dozen (1,842,538); cheese, about 120,000,000 lbs. (81,000,000); bacon, about 600,000,000 pounds (179,837,000); dairy cattle and calves 35,196 head (7,000).

Odds and ends of interest. Good news for ladies, a Prices Board ruling allows a little increased supply of hairpins and bobby pins; also for farmers more production of barbed wire. Restrictions have been removed from factories in Quebec and Ontario so that more Canadian Cheddar cheese will be available for the home market. In the six air observer schools operated by the Canadian Pacific on a non-profit basis for the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan, aircraft has flown more than 41 millions miles. From Jan. 1 to Oct. 1, 1943, 417,865 blood donations were contributed to the Red Cross blood donor clinic across Canada; the record week was in October with 14,297. It is estimated 400,000 men and at least 100,000 women have left farms since 1939, but to help overcome the farm labor shortage some thousands of older people who had retired came back to help.

Sounds far fetched but isn't. It is estimated that the annual gross value of dairy products in recent years has been placed at over 291 million dollars, almost 100 million dollars higher than the estimated annual value of gold production in Canada. The sale of milk brings cheques to about 420,000 farmers and to this number might be added around 40,000 employees in distributing and manufacturing plants. Some authorities estimate at least one-fifth of Canada's population is dependent upon the dairy industry for a living. Old Bossy is quite an important figure in our economy, isn't she?

The Passing Of The Plow

Extensive publicity is being given to a book published in the United States by Edward H. Faulkner entitled "Plowman's Folly", which is based on the assertion that farmers have been wasting time and money in plowing their land. Mr. Faulkner claims better results are obtainable through the use of other implements which stir the surface of the land only enough to cut the weeds and leave the trash on top. This is considered a new and revolutionary idea.

Farmers in Alberta and Saskatchewan are evincing no excitement over the Faulkner proposals for the same idea has been developed over the past quarter of a century, particularly in the southern areas of both of these Canadian provinces. When the prairie sections of Alberta and Saskatchewan were first settled the newcomers brought with them the tillage ideas of the regions from whence they came. The mold board plow was in general use and the farmer who kept his summerfallow continually cultivated was considered to be at the head of his profession. It did not take long to find out, however, that the practice of leaving the top soil in a state of fine cultivation was a poor one. This country is a region of high winds and soil drifting soon became a serious problem. Gradually the farmers gave up the mold board plow, first for the cultivator then the 'one way' disc plow and finally other contrivances, mostly of home design, which travelled a few inches under the soil, cut the weeds, disturbed the surface but little and left the trash on top.

The first Alberta farmer to follow plowless cultivation year after year was a man by the name of Bohannon who farmed in the Sibbald district on the Goose Line. More than 25 years ago this man obtained excellent results in a very drouthy area through his plan of "plowless summerfallowing". He used a cultivator exclusively.

The final clincher against deep plowing was the positive assertion made by officials of the Swift Current federal government experimental station that the only purpose of land cultivation was to kill weeds and that deep plowing was entirely unnecessary.

In recent years extensive experiments in the use of various cultivation implements have been going on in the Lethbridge district centering there on the federal government experimental station. Many farmers have developed ideas of their own with the help of local blacksmiths and machine shops. Some of them are rather weird contrivances. The whole idea is to produce an implement that will stir the soil just sufficiently to kill weeds and to leave the trash on top to prevent blowing.

In the current weekly letter of the Lethbridge Experimental farm the statement is made that plowless tillage has been adopted primarily to combat soil erosion. It has not been of importance in increasing yields. After tests extending over fourteen years the average yield of 19.7 bushels an acre was obtained on plowless fallows and 19.2 bushels an acre on fallows prepared by plowing.

Rare Passengers In Express Car

Montreal, January 17 — Albino mink are scarce, seldom seen by trappers and rarely in railway transit from one place to another. However, the other day, three of these valuable fur-bearing animals, pure white, and with pink eyes, arrived in an express car attached to the Canadian National Railways' train from Toronto, having originally come from Shallow Lake, near Owen Sound. They were going to Lachute, Que.

Employers To Be Required To Check On Male Employees as to Compliance Under Mobilization Regulations

Hon. Humphrey Mitchell, Minister of Labour announces that recently an Order in Council was passed, authorising the Minister of Labour to issue an order which will require all employees of male workers to examine the standing of employees of military call-up age, to make sure that they have complied with National Selective Service Mobilization Regulations.

The term "employer" will include Dominion, Provincial and Municipal Governments, as well as all private businesses, and also will include farmers even where the employee is a son or other relative of the farmer.

The order of the Minister, provided for under the Order in Council will, it is anticipated, be issued in the course of a few weeks, when the necessary arrangements have been completed to assist employers in making the necessary survey. The order will set forth the dates between which employers are to check on their employees.

It is the hope that through this survey any man who may be delinquent in regard to the military call-up, will be located, so that their cases may be dealt with.

The Labour Minister points out that no action on the part of employers is necessary until the formal order is issued—although male employees should in the meantime provide themselves with copies of any documents they need to prove that they have not failed to comply with Mobilization Regulations. A warning in this regard was issued by the Department of Labour some time ago to male persons in employment.

Nuts By The Million But Not For Table

Montreal, January 17 -- Maintaining 30,500 miles of track throughout the Canadian National System is a sizeable task and requires a working force of 12,634 sectionmen to carry out this important job. For this trackage, about 27,500,000 nuts and bolts are required to fasten splice bars at the rail joints and sectionmen devote at least one day of each month to tightening these bolts. When new rail is laid, these workers thoroughly oil all fastenings at the joints to keep them from "freezing", which means to prevent corrosion and to make for easy servicing throughout the life of the rail. In addition, all splice bars and fastenings receive an oil bath once or twice a year.

THE WORLD OF WHEAT

MOISTURE RESERVES ARE LACKING

No one can foresee the future. Confident forecasts often turn out to be wrong. In spite of this, however, farmers have to base their farming operations on the most intelligent forecasts they can make.

This coming crop will start out with less reserves of moisture than our prairies have had for many years past, for the reason that, with the exception of a few favoured areas, the fall rainfall which will be available for the coming crop was considerably lower than average. This means that if an average yield is to be obtained this next year, then better than average rains will have to occur during this coming summer.

Then there is another point. We have already had two good crops running, and only occasionally in the last 60 years have the prairies produced three average crops in succession. This all means that the odds are against an average crop being produced from seed sown on stubble land this coming year. It looks, therefore, as if this would be a good year to summerfallow stubble fields wherever there is a lack of normal moisture and to use this coming summer to accumulate additional moisture and to kill weeds on such fields. However, each farmer must use his own discretion after noting the rain that fell last fall in his own district.

The Wheat Situation

Visible stocks of wheat were 334.8 million bushels on January 7th, 1944, as compared with 338.5 millions a week previous and 468.5 millions a year ago.

Farmers delivered 5 million bushels of wheat in Western Canada during the first week of the current year. This brings total deliveries from August 1st to January 7th to 120 million bushels of wheat. Deliveries in Alberta for that period totaled 27.5 million bushels of wheat.

There has been a steady increase in wheat delivery quotas at many points in Alberta. The fine weather has enabled farmers to haul their grain to shipping points. The comparative mildness of the season has been of great assistance to railways, enabling them to move much more grain than would have been the case if severe weather had prevailed. --Alberta Wheat Pool Budget.

There Must Be Trade

It is a plain and controvertible fact that Canada cannot be [illegible]ous nor can there be any degree of full employment [illegible] Canadian farmers obtain substantial markets for their surplus production. These farmers produce a volume of food greatly in excess of what is needed in Canada. Consequently, they must obtain markets overseas to take care of these surpluses. No postwar planning can be successful unless it provides for the securing of such markets. Obviously it will be necessary to provide for the import of goods if such markets for food surpluses are to be obtained. It will be too much to expect that Europe will have any surplus cash to pay for food imports.

THE PEN MIGHTIER THEN THE SWORD?

DIPLOMATS THE WORLD over were rocked on their feet this week by the story of an alleged meeting between British and German Diplomats at which a separate peace was supposed to be discussed. The story given importance by reason of its being published in one of Russia's most important newspapers created a sensation such as only an event of major importance could. British officials both in Britain and the United States immediately denied the report, the general concensus of opinion being that the British people would turn against its own government should it deliberately desert Russia at this time.

In the reports appearing in different publications there were numerous explanations, but one of the most obvious lessons to be learned from the incident is that public opinion as well as force of arms has much to do with victory or defeat. And also that public opinion may be swayed at any given moment by a well told lie or a misinformed report. In the reading of war news, commentaries, etc., there was never a time when sound judgement on the part of the general public was more necessary than now. The pen, if not mightier than the sword, is still a forceful weapon.

"IT'S ALL RIGHT . . . "—

(By John Gould in the Christian Science Monitor)

A GREAT BIG fellow backed a truck up against my barn the other day and went up on the haymow with a pitchfork. He opened the big door and began pitching out hay at a great rate. I never saw the fellow before, and naturally wondered about his presence.

I must confess that hardly anything goes on around here but I consider it carefully as Dispatch material, and this certainly seemed like a good situation to approach thoughtfully and make the most of. I climbed up in the mow, and the big fellow tossed me a nod most pleasantly, never missing a stroke with the fork.

"Hello," I said.

"Hello," he said.

"You probably know what you're doing," I said. "But I don't. Should I?"

"I've come for Joe's hay," he called. "Any objections?"

I couldn't be sure if his manner was blustery, but I noticed he was even bigger than I thought, so I steered a safe course. "None whatever, provided it's Joe's hay—but I just don't happen to think it is. You haven't made a mistake, have you?"

"Aren't you Ray Beech?"

"No."

"Ain't this the Beech place?"

"No."

He stopped pitching hay and leaned on the fork. "Who are you?" I told him. "This your barn?" I said it was. Without a word he jumped out in the truck, pitched the hay back in the barn, closed the doors, and drove off. I wandered around trying to find something to do for the next hour or so, but I couldn't see for the life of me how I was going to make a Dispatch out of that—and yet it seemed to have elements worth developing.

Then he came back. He backed the truck in again, opened the doors and began pitching the hay out. I climbed back up in the mow and he grinned at me happily. "It's all right," he called, "Charlie Graham says it's all right."

"Who is Charlie Graham?"

"Don't you know Charlie?"

"No."

"Well, he's a blacksmith; he says it's all right."

I told him I guessed he'd better wait a minute—it wasn't altogether all right, and this was still my barn and my hay.

Then I learned that this was Charlie's hay—or rather it was until Joe Parker bought it. Well, Joe bought five tons of it, and paid $5 down and was to pay $6 a ton when he got it, and my present visitor was hauling it for Joe. Later he was to get the other five tons for Charlie, next week sometime. At first he thought this was the Beech place because Ray Beech owned the hay first, and somebody said it was in Ray's barn, and he thought this was where Ray lived. But Charlie set him straight—and this was it, all right enough.

About that time I had a trickle of enlightenment, and I said let's go in and call Ray up and find out what the story is. Then we cleared everything up and it was fairly simple. Last April I sold four tons of hay to Frank Barstow, and he was to pay as he took it at $12 a ton. But Frank got drafted, never took any, and is in England. His wife needed some money, and she didn't know any different, so she sold four tons to someone, and someone sold it to someone else, and eventually it was the property of a man at Litchfield Four Corners. Someone sued him, and took all he had, and a lawyer named Judd kept the hay for his fee. The lawyer gave it to his brother-in-law, and the brother-in-law swapped it with Ray Beech for six cords of wood. By this time the original quantity had increased to ten tons, and the price had fluctuated accordingly. Since no one thought to confer with me, I had decided Frank wouldn't need hay in England, and I sold it to a man in Topsham who came and got it the same day—cash in hand.

The big fellow waggled his head thoughtfully as the various transactions came to light, and finally said, "I guess it ain't all right, then." I said, "No, I guess it ain't," and he pitched the hay back in again, closed the doors and drove away.

The only point in relating all this is to show that life continues to be interesting in these parts.

More About M.D. Beaver

regarding his inspection. He commented on the weed situation in general and mentioned that it was difficult to get weeds eradicated from private property when they were allowed to grow on lakeshores and roadsides.

REQUESTED TO PAY

It was decided that Mr. Hutchinson be requested to pay seed grain [illegible].

OATS FOR SALE

It was announced that Mr. Annebo has 1700 bus. of oats for sale a third of which belong to the M D He valued them at 55c and they tested 90 per cent. It was suggested that any councillors hearing of anyone wanting oats, a sale could be arranged.

Crop reports from tennants of M. D. land were read.

REDEMPTION BYLAW

Redemption bylaw regarding consolidation of taxes on the farm of Mr. Tymchuk was passed.

INSPECTOR'S REPORT

Reeve Ovens read the inspector's report. This was a very good report and went into much detail.

On the motion of Councillor Logan the inspector's report was adopted and the department will be informed that Council was very pleased with it.

On the motion of Councillor Giebelhaus the secretary was instructed to write Mr. Lonnech to the effect that Council must have the agreed amount of money otherwise they would have no alternative but to sell the farm.

ALLOWANCE FOR REEVE

At the December meeting it was decided to allow Reeve Ovens a sum of money for the extra work done and numerous trips to Ryley made by him. The first year of amalgamation required much attention to M. D. matters from the Reeve. It was agreed to allow Reeve Ovens $150.00 this being little more than out of pocket expenses.

On the motion of Reeve Ovens, Councillor Lucas was appointed a committee of one to arrange for the removal to hospital of a ratepayer who is quite ill.

A list of accounts were then read and passed for payment.

Forage Crop Seed Policy then came up for discussion, the councillors saying that so far a relatively small number of orders had been received. In order that the secretary may order from the Department intelligently it was, on the motion of Councillor Anderson, decided to make Friday, the 25th of February, the last day orders may be received. This applies to the arrangement by which the M.D. sells forage crop seed at cost to ratepayers. A small deposit is required with the order.

United Church News

The 40th Annual meeting of the United Church congregation was held on Monday evening, January 17th The Rev. D. K. Allan, pastor, presided. There was a good representative gathering to hear the reports of the work of the church

The session report showed steady progress in the devotional and spiritual side of the Church. Communion Service had been held regularly and was well attended' There had been [illegible] baptisms and 10 funeral services

The Board of [illegible] revealed the [illegible] of the Church. This has been the best year in the way of giving to the work of the church. The Minister's salary was increased to $1500 and the Missionary givings were greatly increased.

A substantial balance remained after meeting all our obligations.

The Sunday School report given by Earl Francis was inspiring. The Superintendent and teachers are doing a splendid service The attendance keeps up and the interest of the boys and girls is very noticeable. All financial obligations were met with a balance on hand.

The Junior Choir and their leader, Mrs. Stinson, were heartily thanked for their splendid service in the Sunday School and Church.

The Ladies' Aid report showed continued effort and success. The interior decorating of the church was their supreme project.

The W M.S. creates a fine atmosphere in the congregation and met all their allocation

Messrs Beirnes and Jacobs were re-elected to the Board of Stewards

Mr. Jos. Francis was appointed Presbytery representative for the ensuing year.

All these reports with the report of Ketchamoot read by Mrs. Sears and the Lakeshore report were well received

The church was never in a better and brighter condition, spiritually and materially than this year.

Mr. Allan spoke of the fine cooperation and harmonious relations that was found among the congregations.

Mr. Allan recalled his first annual meeting with its fine attendance and enthusiasm, and then quietly and feelingly said this would be the last over which he would preside. He intends to retire from the active Ministry in September.

Words of appreciation were spoken of the fine service he has rendered during these 11 years and of the grand and gracious service rendered by Mrs. Allan.

A vacancy committee has been appointed. A committee was also appointed to arrange for the 50th Anniversary of the Church which will be held this year. A social half hour was held at the close

FOR SAFE KEEPING

On one of the fast trains of the Canadian National Railways, a lady was trying to get into an upper but the porter could not find the ladder. "Lady," he said, "I have been a porter for 10 years and this is the first time I've ever lost my ladder. I had it right here a minute ago." An English sailor popped his head out of an upper and said, "I'll lend you my ladder 'til morning." He had the ladder in the berth with him.

HARD TO TELL

The visitor in the defense plant was talking to a worker. He pointed to a young worker nearby who had short hair, a cap, slacks, a cigarette. "It's hard to tell if that is boy or girl," said the visitor. "It's a girl, and she's my daughter," said the one he was talking to. The visitor said: "My dear sir, forgive me. I did not know that you were her father." And the other said: "I'm not her father—I'm her mother."

FIRST BAKER

The man who baked the first loaf was a Chinaman. His name was Ching-Noung. He was the first to teach his countrymen the method of making bread from wheat and wine from rice. Ching-Noung was born in the year 1998 B.C. and we must assume he baked his first loaf 30 or 40 years later. —Northwestern Miller.

SUMMER ALREADY?

This is January by the calendar but at the Mercury there are butterflies—well—a butterfly. Sedro Warwar brought it in all alive and fluttery. Cedro says he caught it in his car which was in an unheated garage, and as he cannot remember seeing butterflies in January before, he brought it to the Mercury office. We don't remember seeing them either, which makes it unanimous.

WALLACE MICKLEBURGH PASSES ON

The grim reaper came to the Mickleburgh home on Sunday, January 16th and claimed Wallace Mickleburgh, aged 75 years.

Wallace Mickleburgh was born at Haverstak Hill, London, England on December 8th, 1868. Together with two brothers and one sister he came to Canada and in 1906 homesteaded in the Spilsted district west of Tofield. The three brothers and sister lived in the Spilsted district for many years being well known and highly respected. Of the original four there is only now one left, Bert Mickleburgh, and to him will go the sympathy of the district in the loss of his brother.

The funeral was held on Thursday, Rev. D. K. Allan officiating, interment taking place in the Tofield cemetery.

CARD OF THANKS

I would like to express my sincere thanks to the many kind friends for the practical help and expressions of sympathy during my recent sad bereavement in the loss of my brother, Wallace.

Around the Capital: Canada's per capita contribution to the United Nations war requirements has been estimated by the government statisticians at $174. This compares with a per capita lend lease contribution in the United States of $141. Experiments carried on by the National Research Council on a new hot-setting plastic glue process for use in making laminated wood and fastening all types of wooden joints are meeting with success. The R.C.A.F. has asked the public to report stunting and low flying pilots.

You've all heard of course, that the Dominion government will be paying Canadian hog producers a premium on quality hogs, $3 for Grade A selects and $2 on hogs B1. Reasons are to maintain hog production, allowing negotiation of a 4-year contract with Great Britain and to show she can depend on Canada for quality in peace or war. You know our farmers last year marketed through inspected packing plants eleven hogs for every five they sold before the war, a total of 7,147,846 and that's 120 per cent over 1938 marketings. The western provinces accounted for most of the increased production—marketings last year being three and a half times that of 1938.

It is estimated 130,000 employers will make the new returns required by the Department of Labour on the distribution of labour as of January 3, 1944. This return is very necessary in connection with manpower plans. One of the things asked for is an estimate on the number of employees required next June 30th. Agriculture, private homes employing domestic servants and government departments will not have to report.

This country's coal shortage had folks worried about last May but the outlook has improved. Canadian coal mines showed a net increase of 3,123 workers from June to the end of November. The program to increase production returned to the mines practically every physically fit ex-miner. Total employment at all mines at the end of November was 27,986. Mines in the Maritimes got 1,700 of the added miners, the prairies 1282 and British Columbia 190.

A study was made of meat used by 2,050 families in Saint John, N.B., Montreal and Vancouver. It was found the cost of meat amounted to 26 per cent of the total food bill in Saint John, 27 per cent in Montreal and 18 per cent in Vancouver. On the average meat was used twice daily in 37 to 47 per cent of the families in the three cities. About 22 per cent of those interviewed in Saint John, for instance, thought meat could be used three times per day without injury. In Montreal 29 per cent of those interviewed were of the opinion that pork was injurious to health and in Saint John only 18 per cent held this opinion. Ninety-two per cent of the housewives in Vancouver thought meat was as beneficial as other foods.

Here and there: Because there will be heavier casualties with a second front Red Cross Blood Donor Service across Canada want the quota stepped up from 15,000 to 20000 donations of blood weekly; let's all do our part. Believe it or not but the average output of the farm worker was 96 per cent greater in 1942 than in 1939. Between August 1 and December 16, 1943 a total of 163,142,225 bushels of Canadian grain was moved by water from the Head of the Lakes.

Orders of interest to agriculture during last month included one establishing price ceiling on horse-meat used as food by fox farmers and others, price ceilings on poultry grit; and an amendment to the livestock slaughtering order putting responsibility on buyer as well as seller of carcass, to see that the Board's official stamp is on the carcass. With a view to proper utilization of surplus milk which accumulates from time to time, the Agricultural Food Board authorised milk manufacturers, cheese factories and creameries to purchase milk from the fluid milk market when offered.

Egg cases will be hard to get, the Department of Agriculture says more being required this year than ever as the egg objective is 387,000,000 dozen, 22 million more than in 1943. Return the cases undamaged is the urgent advice.

There is not likely to be any wholesale layoffs in our shipyards because of the decision that no new keels for corvettes and frigates will be laid down in the Dominion this year. Minesweepers are not affected and it is thought the yards have enough work to keep them going through 1944. Licking of the submarine menace is now being felt. Our wartime ship building programme gave work to nearly 80,000 men and women in 21 major yards and 60 smaller ones. In four years of war more than 300 naval vessels have been launched. A grand record.

Interest to farmers, etc: Package bees from the Southern states play a big part in our bee industry; orders should be placed early in the winter otherwise the shippers are booked up solid. There are about 5000 bees in a pound, and are obtained in packages of one, two or three pounds. Good information is available in Wartime Pamphlet No. 3 "Package Bees" obtained from the Agriculture Department, Ottawa.

NEW GRAIN STORAGE RATES

Storage rates for wheat and flax will be 1/40 of a cent a bushel a day in western country elevators from the period September 29th, 1943 to July 31st, 1944. This is a reduction from the rate of 1/30 of a cent amount previously prevailing. However the storage rate in terminal elevators will continue at 1/30 of a cent a day. —Alberta Wheat Pool.

A new medical research group has been formed for the examination of methods of treatment of wounded Canadians, to improve healing techniques. Members of the group will follow wounded Canadians from front line to base hospital, checking on treatment all the way.

SYSTEMATIC SAVING

A lot of people consider the sale of War Savings Stamps as an unimportant endeavor, but these people probably do not realize that upwards of two million dollars per month will be obtained from this source alone in Canada during 1944.

They do not realize either that the systematic purchase of one stamp per day will return them approximately $16 per month in 7 1-2 years. Similarly, an investment of $40 per month now would return $50 in the same time.

1. They are better than cash in [illegible].
2. They earn a high rate of interest.
3. They create credit standing.
4. They make cash available in emergency.
5. They promote thrift.
6. They provide security in living.
7. They increase in value and are non taxable.
8. They help win the war.
9. They provide necessities for Armed Forces.
10. They help bring back our fighting men.
11. They assist in rehabilitation.
12. They are convertible into Bonds.
13. They are guaranteed by all the resources of Canada.

Wouldn't you like to receive a cheque for $36 each month to supplement your income during the post war period when adjustments are necessary?

You housewives who are now earning a big pay cheque for your war efforts will no doubt be back to the old housekeeping grind when the war is over. You'll miss that monthly cheque so why not put aside a small amount each month so that that feeling of independence will continue. Think it over people. It's wise to buy Stamps, Certificates, and Bonds while you have that extra income.

Save The Top Soil

Deep, rich soils may stand erosion losses and still produce crops for a while. Grey, bush soils will not stand them so long. It takes nature centuries to build a furrow slice of rich top soil. A farmer can lose it in a generation and riddle his field with gulches besides.

In 1922 soil samples were taken from an exceptionally deep, rich prairie soil near Grande Prairie. The top six or seven inches analysed 55 per cent richer in organic matter than the sub-surface strata; 132 per cent richer in nitrogen and 35 per cent richer in phosphoric acid. Through wind or water erosion some fields have already worn to the subsoil. Albright, Beaverlodge Experimental Station.

Manitoba Farmers Set Example

It is difficult indeed to find topics for these articles of equal interest to all our readers from the Red River to the Peace River. Obviously, we cannot deal with matters of purely local importance. While this is really a salute to Manitoba farmers, it merits the attention of all.

Ever since this Department was organised, we have stressed, above all, two problems—Weeds and Soil Conservation. If you, in your district, were to organize a meeting to discuss prices, debt legislation, or farm labour, you would be sure of support. But suppose you were to arrange a meeting for the sole purpose of studying weed problems; how many farmers would come? Well, on November 30, the Minister of Agriculture for Manitoba called such a meeting. For nearly four hours, 136 farmers sat on hard seats completely absorbed with the problem of controlling leafy spurge. For three years, the Department of Agriculture has co-operated with municipal officials and other farmers in a program to conquer this weed. Fifty municipalities were represented at the meeting. Results of control methods by chemicals, by tillage and by sheep were discussed, and means for making the work more effective were studied.

Government agriculturists have learned that they must get better acquainted with the farmer himself. Farmers have discovered that the professionally trained agriculturist has something to offer. Leafy spurge is in for a tough time in Manitoba. The same spirit will defeat weeds and preserve soils anywhere, and these two goals can be reached no other way.

On behalf of the Line Elevator Sponsors, as well as on our own, we wish our readers a Merry Christmas and a New Year that will bring peace.

New Car Licenses Will Be Out March 1

New motor car licenses for 1944 will be available to applicants soon after March 1, according to information received by the Alberta Motor Association.

The plan is to make the licenses available some time before the usual rush that occurs is experienced at issuing agencies just before the opening of the new license year on April 1.

Provincial officials have stated that the federal "AA" gasoline ration books will be issued at the same time as the provincial motor license is taken out. A similar method was carried out in 1943.

While the response to the earlier issuance of licenses was not large last year, it is expected that there will be an improvement this year.

This year, paper stickers for the windshield and rear windows will be issued instead of the metal plates. Supplies of the paper stickers are to be distributed to government issuing agencies and branches of the A.M.A. at Edmonton, Calgary and Lethbridge during February.

As in past years, motor car owners may obtain their car and drivers' licenses at the A.M.A. branches.

"I'll need her back for our Rhythm Fantasy show." Patricia has now returned to Winnipeg and next month returns to the air as vocalist on three regular CBC programs from Winnipeg. The Wheat Situation

Visible stocks of Canadian wheat on January 14th totaled 351.6 million bushels or about 117 million bushels less than the total a year ago. The cumulative total deliveries of wheat at country points in Western Canada from August 1st, 1943 to January 14th, 1944, were approximately 124.2 million bushels.

Stocks of wheat in country elevators on the prairie provinces on January 14th were around 200 million bushels.

The weather has continued fine throughout Western Canada during the past week. In Alberta the weather was exceptionally warm and there was no snow covering.

The weather since early fall has been the finest experienced in Southern Alberta in over fifty years. There has been virtually no precipitation and moisture reserves are at a minimum.

In the United States winter wheat belt, conditions are variable. In the semi-arid areas, moisture is noticeably deficient.

Ontario is complaining that the lack of snow covering is endangering the winter wheat. Prospects for a 1944 wheat crop in that province are not good.

In Europe conditions for winter grain crops are good, over the northerly areas. The Danube Basin hasn't had enough moisture and similar conditions prevail in Spain. —Wheat Pool Bulletin

Hog Production In Alberta

The swine population in Alberta in 1943 reached 2,337,000 head, largest total ever recorded by a Canadian province. In 1891 Alberta had only 5,100 hogs.

Revenue from hogs exceeded $80 million, surpassing by about 10 per cent, the revenue obtained from the sale of all other animal products. In 1923 the west contributed 32 per cent of Canada's hog production and the east 68 per cent, Ontario's share of that being 64 per cent. In 1942, Ontario supplied 32.5 per cent of Canada's hog production and Alberta, 35.2 per cent.

The above information is contained in an address delivered in Edmonton last week by Peter Wylie, provincial livestock promoter. He said that considering the feed supply available in the province there seems to be no reason why in the next ten or fifteen years Alberta should not be producing from 3 million to 4 million hogs annually. —Wheat Pool Budget

THE RED CROSS—

WITH THE TEMPO of warfare keyed up to modern science and invention, facilities to care for the wounded and distressed must also be speeded up. There was a time when war casualties were limited to the battle field and combat at sea, but today warfare, and with it casualties, have expanded and includes all classes and conditions of society. Therefore however zealously one may be engrossed in their own particular problems of life it is his or her simple duty to give a thought and if possible give some assistance to an organization, founded, designed and equipped to relieve human suffering brought about by war. That actual performance exceeds this and help is given to victims of earthquakes, fires and floods, is all to the society's credit. That it is international in scope, knowing no frontier barriers, and that it draws no line as regards color, race or creed, also excites admiration and respect. In short the Red Cross Society is an organization which helps those who are wounded and in distress and who are unable to help themselves.

On Tuesday night the annual meeting of the Tofield Branch of the Canadian Red Cross was held at Tofield. There were five persons present which as far as an annual meeting of an important organization is concerned is a discouraging turn-out. But very fortunately, the attendance at the annual meeting was not by any means a measure of the importance or usefulness of the local branch. In another column will be found a news report of the meeting which briefly records the financial activities of the local organizations. And it is a very creditable showing too, but it does not record the number and variety of articles made and sent out.

Regardless of the small attendance at the annual meeting, A. E. Allan as secretary-treasurer and Mrs. Hammond as work convenor are to be congratulated upon the excellent showing of the society during the past year. In its way the small attendance is more of a compliment than a discourtesy. There is such a thing as leaving well enough alone.

The Harm Tariffs Do

Almost every day we read articles written by prominent people expressing the thought that if Canada is to have any measure of prosperity after the war it will be vitally necessary for Canada to be able to export to other countries large quantities of her products. It is said over and over that there is hardly any country in the world which depends so much on exports as does Canada.

We read too, almost every day, statements by competent nutritionists that the people of the world in general never have had, and will not have for long years to come, sufficient of even the plainest of food, and that, therefore, the welfare of mankind as a whole depends upon the people of the world being able to receive adequate amounts of foodstuffs. Continually, too, we hear quoted the terms of the United Nations Lend Lease Agreement, signed by all the countries of the United Nations and the terms of the Atlantic Charter that no preferential tariffs will be maintained after the war, and that the people of the world must have access on reasonable terms to the foodstuffs and other raw materials they require for their living and sustenance.

In spite of all this however, we hear but little from anyone that in order to make these exports we shall have to be willing to permit the goods made by other people to cross our borders; for as we have so often pointed out in these columns, unless we allow other people to sell their goods freely to us, then obviously, these other people cannot possibly find the necessary money with which to purchase our surplus foodstuffs which they require so badly for their very existence.

There is but one way to do this, which is to tear down the existing high Canadian tariffs, and to do away with quotas, all of which in the past have so handicapped and curtailed imports coming into this country, and which of course will continue to curtail imports coming in—hence our exports going out—if existing high tariffs are continued.

Friends of the freedom of trade, those who look forward to a prosperous agriculture on these prairies and to prosperity in all the other great industries of Canada which depend upon exports for a living are anxiously waiting for some announcement that after the war existing high tariffs will be torn down so that our surplus wheat, coarse grains, livestock products and all kinds of other products which we have to offer from Canada—including pulpwood, paper, lumber, fish, fruits, minerals and so forth—can be exported to the people of other countries who badly need these products in exchange of course, for the fruits of their toil, the goods, commodities and services which they in turn have to offer to us and which our people need.

THE EVIL EFFECTS OF TARIFFS

High tariffs have been responsible for imposing severe suffering, hardship and distress upon millions of people in Canada, including our prairie farmers. These high tariffs, which were set up during the period between these two wars, had the following harmful effects:

(a) Because these tariffs curtailed imports, they automatically curtailed our exports of wheat and other products.

(b) Because our exports were curtailed, the unsold surpluses weighed heavily upon the markets and so depressed prices—with wheat for instance to a lower figure than had been registered for over 300 years.

(c) Because these high tariff walls made it impossible for our farmers and all of us to purchase goods on the foreign markets where our products were sold, we were obliged to purchase goods made in Canada which were protected by tariff walls; which tariff walls caused the prices of the goods to be much higher than our farmers and all of us could properly afford, and so greatly increased our costs of production.

It will be observed, therefore, that tariffs not only reduced our exports, but in addition sharply reduced the prices of the smaller amounts that actually were sold, so greatly reducing farmers' incomes, and then the same tariffs raised the costs of all the things our farmers had to buy. All of which brought about that period of suffering and hardship to our farmers and to all of us which economists termed THE GREAT DEPRESSION.

One can say then, without doubt that if these existing high tariffs and quotas are maintained, that exactly the same sequence of sad events—another depression — will certainly occur again after this war.

But there is something else of a much higher order to be considered. If tariffs are torn down and quotas abolished, then the people of other countries through the sale of their own goods and commodities will be able to purchase freely from us the foodstuffs and other materials they so badly need. These foreign people will in consequence be better fed and employed and therefore will be much less inclined to listen to demagogues and agitators who might try to lead them into World War number three.

CROP PROSPECTS ARE POOR

The Searle fall moisture map published in our issue of January 5th indicated clearly that moisture reserves available for the coming crop on the prairies are lower than they have been for a number of years past.

The same news comes from the United States that the fall precipitation in that country, as estimated by the United States Department of Agriculture is no less than 21 per cent below normal, which is approximately the same deficiency in moisture reserves as exist on the prairies as revealed by the Searle report.

It is certain, therefore, that when spring seeding takes place the odds are for a less than normal yield per acre of wheat and other grains on the whole North American Continent.

Canada, officially, is attempting merely to maintain last year's wheat acreage, whereas the United States recommended their farmers to make a considerable increase in wheat acreage. Unless, however, much better than average rains occur during the coming season then in spite of the hoped for increased wheat acreage in the United States the prospects are for a lower total yield of wheat than was harvested this last year.—Searle Grain Company, Ltd.

New Hog Policy

Hon. J. G. Gardiner, federal minister of agriculture, announced changes in the government's hog policy as follows:

1. Payment of a bonus of $3.00 on each hog delivered which is grade "A" and a bonus of $2.00 for all grade "B1" hogs. The money will be paid direct to producers and the policy will continue for six months after the end of the war. It will mean the distribution of between $10 and $15 million a year.

2. Negotiations are proceeding with the British government to have the present contract which calls for the shipment of 900 million pounds of pork during the next two years extended for another two-year period.

In approving the premium payment for top quality animals the government took the position that the proposed price for export bacon in 1944 and 1945 of $22.50 per hundred pounds at the Atlantic seaboard could not be increased without endangering the present domestic price ceiling for pork.

Hogs are sold on a dressed weight basis. This runs from 72 to 80 per cent of live weights. The average hog will dress out about 75 per cent of live weight.

The following table gives the grade, weight limits of each grade and price to farmer of dressed weight:

A	140 to 170	$16.50
B1 . .	135 to 175	15.85
B2 ...	125 to 134	15.10
B3 . .	176 to 185	15.85
C1 ...	125 to 175	14.85
C2 ..	120 to 124	14.65
C3 ...	176 to 185	14.75
Lights	119 down	14.55
Heavies	186 to 205	14.30

The bonus payments will be $3.00 per animal for grade A hogs and $2.00 per animal for grade B1 hogs. —Alberta Wheat Pool Budget.

Wheat Prices

The relationships of wheat prices in the various overseas exporting countries are materially different at the present than under normal conditions, says the United States department of agriculture's publication "The Wheat Situation". It goes on to say that prices in the United States are substantially above levels which would exist under peace conditions and without government support. Current prices in Australia and Argentina are low compared with Canadian prices but when the shipping situation is eased and the large stocks in these countries can again move freely into world trade, the narrowing of this difference may be expected.

A larger world wheat acreage is expected for 1944 with increases likely in the four overseas exporting countries. Moisture has been favorable for fall wheat in Western and Northern Europe but in the Danube Basin and parts of Southeastern Europe it has been dry.

Stocks of wheat in the four exporting countries on July 1, 1944, are expected to be at least 1,200 million bushels. Even with liberal estimates for domestic and export distribution in 1943-44, by July 1st, 1945, they may be down to about 800 million bushels, which would still be above average.

A GLOBAL WAR—
A GLOBAL PEACE

We have all been told that this is a Global War. We have only to glance at a globe of the world and to note the many areas in the world where fighting is taking place to realize that this term GLOBAL WAR is correct.

This Global War, however, I for one suggest will certainly require a Global Peace if we are to have any assurance that another depression will not occur on these prairies, and that World War number three will not break out in a few years. A Global Peace means simply that the fruits of the earth, the foodstuffs, minerals and other products of Nature deposited in different parts of the World will have to be made available on reasonable terms to all mankind.

This decidedly will require something approaching International Free Trade, a tearing down of existing high Canadian tariffs; all as the Atlantic Charter requires. Yet already we hear of a campaign to maintain existing Canadian trade-strangling evil tariffs and quotas which for years have prohibited foreign goods coming into our country. There is but one way to offset this "nationalistic" campaign, which is for everyone who believes in the freedom of trade to make his voice heard, for groups to pass resolutions and to forward them to Ottawa, and for individuals to write to their respective Members of Parliament.

ARMY NOTES

Ottawa, January 18 — Confidence that the majority of girls now in the Canadian Women's Army Corps will be ready to settle down to Normal civilian life when the war is over was expressed in Winnipeg recently by Lieutenant-Colonel Mary Dover, commanding officer of the CWAC basic training centre at Kitchener, Ont.

Lt.-Col. Dover said that she believes girls will be better prepared for civilian life as a result of the excellent training they receive in the Corps. They have no illusions about glamour in the Army, she said. Many have been doing humdrum jobs for two years, and still execute their duties with the same conscientiousness.

Residents of Halifax are more conscious of time today than they have been for the past 31 years. Gunner Alfred Finch, who for the past six years has officiated as noontime gunner for Halifax, is firing his 12 o'clock signal with a new gun. After 31 years' service, the veteran 12-pound breech loader has been replaced by an 18-pounder, whose blank charges are considerably louder than those of its predecessor.

Strains of the Bridal Chorus from Lohengrin have been heard in many strange surroundings but seldom has a more unusual place for a wedding ceremony been selected than a Prisoner-of-War camp deep in the Canadian Rockies.

Yet that is where Mrs. Mary Gear, of Calgary became the bride of Lieut. G. Mullin, V.C., M.M., of Moosomin, Sask. The company of the Veterans Guard of Canada to which Lieut. Mullin, a former sergeant-at-arms of the Saskatchewan Provincial Legislature is attached is at present on guard duty at the internment camp.

Lieut. Mullin, hero of World War I, received the Victoria Cross for storming a pill-box at Passchendaele. Residents of Moosomin group his name with that of Lieut.-Gen. A. G. L. McNaughton as typical of Moosomin citizens who have attained high military fame.

Farm Machinery & Motors Repair Courses

As announced previously, arrangements have been made for the holding of a number of Farm Machinery Repair Schools during the winter months under the provisions of the Dominion-Alberta Youth Training Programme. These schools are under the direction of the Provincial Department of Agriculture. The series opened at Lloydminster on Monday, January 10th with a full attendance and a second course will commence at Lousana on January 19th. Two more points definitely selected are Holden beginning January 31st and Brooks, February 21st. Several other places are under consideration and will be announced when arrangements have been fully completed.

These courses are designed to assist farming communities, to meet the emergency created by war-time limitation of new farm machinery and tractors. Special attention is given to the simpler repairs of farm machinery and to the overhaul of tractors and farm motors. Some time is spent upon the proper adjustment of implements for maximum efficiency especially as it may apply to local conditions and farming practices.

Since only one Instructor is responsible for the work at each school, the number that may be admitted is definitely limited. The number of available Instructors with the necessary training and experience for the work, has been a determining factor in the number of schools that will be held.

There is to be some distribution of small arms ammunition for sporting purposes later this year.

Mightier Than The Sword

being the Popular Report of the British and Foreign Bible Society for 1943, by the Rev. John A. [illegible] M.C., M.A. Literary Superintendent.

The title, to say the least of it, is timely, and some sentences from the Preface indicate the main line of thought from which the whole story proceeds: "Can the sword be allowed to govern human affairs or determine the destiny of mankind? The Bible proclaims with one voice that mightier than the sword of [illegible] is the sword of Spirit, which is the Word of God."

The chapters unfold the theme under the following captions: "The Pen of the Translator," "The [illegible] of the Spirit;" and "The Power of the Word," with concluding sections on "Planning for Tomorrow" and "The Home Base."

Post-War Immigration Advocated For Canada

Ottawa, January 24 — "Canada must return to a more positive policy on immigration as compared with the negative one that has been dominant for some time," said J. S. McGowan, director of colonization and agriculture, Canadian National Railways, Montreal, in an address in Ottawa. "We must realize that immigrants are assets and not liabilities."

Expressing purely personal views, Mr. McGowan went on to say that he was convinced that "if our present population were doubled, it would give us a higher standard of living, provide us with goods and services at lower cost, and increase the markets for all our products."

He was not in favor of a policy of free and unrestricted immigration; there should always be selection, he said; but he thought a more liberal policy should be established. "There should be at all times a steady infiltration of people for our urban areas, particularly of those coming to friends or relatives, and there should be no restrictions on this class other than those of health and literacy."

Regular Army trucks are now being equipped with new detachable fittings that can convert them into ambulances with a minimum of delay. The fittings are harness-like in appearance and stretchers are slung from them.

Doctors serving with the Canadian Army will receive a Medical Journal which is being produced by the Department of Pensions and National Health and the Medical Services of Navy, Army and Air Force, to keep them informed of trends and advances in medical science.

Suitable Canadian Forestry Corps personnel who have returned to Canada are being afforded the opportunity of remustering into other services for Overseas duty.

Food Industry To Sponsor War Savings Stamp Drive

[illegible] February [illegible] food [illegible] across the Dominion will co-operate with the Department of Finance in sponsoring a War Savings Stamp Drive.

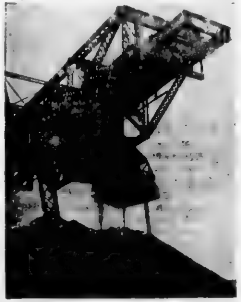
The Minister of Finance in a message to the food industry says:

"The Retail Food Merchants and their suppliers are in an ideal position to reach all Canadians with a War Savings appeal. They have an opportunity to emphasize the importance of continued saving and of unrelenting care in restricting expenditures to what is essential.

In launching your drive to sell $2,000,000 in War Savings Stamps during the month of February, you are not only making a real contribution to the war finance programme, but what is equally important, launching the National War Finance Committee's 1944 campaign to increase the number of regular weekly [illegible] stamp [illegible] gave impetus to [illegible] 1943 stamp selling activities through your very successful drive last year. I am confident that your efforts will be equally successful in 1944.

I [illegible] great interest the progress of your February drive."

C.P.R. Relieves Coal Shortage



THIS huge overhead travelling bridge, equipped with 10-ton clamshell bucket, is one of two such units operating at the Canadian [illegible] Railway Company's big coal dock in Fort William, Ont., where 1,224,000 tons of American bituminous coal were handled during the Great Lakes navigation season in order to relieve western Canada's threatened fuel shortage.

According to an announcement by M. H. Enman, general fuel agent for the C.P.R. in western Canada, the company acted to avert the coal shortage with permission of the government, importing the coal from the United States on the assumption that coal fields in Alberta and British Columbia would not be able to supply the increased demands of transportation, industry and the general public. Of the total imported 1,050,000 tons were for the C.P.R.'s own use and 175,000 tons for other users.

Based on the number of pounds of coal required to haul 1,000 tons of freight one mile the C.P.R.'s share of the coal represented a total of 14,985,714,000 gross ton miles of passenger and freight movement, or about one-third of the gross ton miles operated on western lines for 1943.

HASTINGS LAKE

The Ladies' club wishes to announce that a whist drive will be held at the school on Friday, Feb. 11th, starting at 8 p.m. The admission, adults 25c, high school students 15c and children 10c with lunch included sounds almost too good to be true. The purpose is to purchase new curtains for the school so any excuse for non-attendance had better be good. And don't forget in that last minute rush before you throw the cat out, to bring a deck of cards.

While we're on the subject: Wanted: By the Ladies' Club, a first class teamster or escort. Qualifications: Must be of refined character, dress neatly and must always be well shaven. No objection will be made though to a small mustache. He must possess a good wagon box and a sound set of sleighs, preferably green in color. His possession of a fast team of matched dapple greys is almost a necessity. Being a gentleman he will not speak unless spoken to, remembering always that it is the lady's privilege to speak first. Should the necessity to address his horses arise he must not raise his voice unduly or use any language more profane than hey!

Age: The ladies being happily married, have reached the unanimous decision that there be no limiting factor here providing that the applicant be young. Remuneration: Far more than any one man deserves—the pleasure that comes from associating with such jolly ladies. Length of employment: For the duration of the war after which the services of a genuine he-man will be secured.

A last point: From all appearances must be immune to the cold. Must not mind waiting outside for four or five hours. The ladies deeply regret the necessity of dispensing with the services of their present teamster but being a bachelor he was much too hard on the cake.

Neil Ellis had the misfortune to fracture two bones in his right wrist while playing at school last week. Mr. Barrow kindly took him to Ryley where Dr. McPherson applied a cast and put his arm in a sling. As little sister Doreen puts it: "He looks as though he just came back from Italy." But then we just don't expect much sympathy from a sister, do we Neil?

We sincerely hope that Dorothy Peterson will soon be able to return home from the hospital where she is at present suffering from what appears to be an infection of the arm.

The district was saddened to learn of the death of Mrs. Pelsfoot which occurred late Thursday night. Our deepest sympathy goes to her daughter, Mrs. Riske and family.

Congratulations are in order to Mr. and Mrs. Alex Tough on the recent birth of a son in Edmonton. At least that is the way the grape vine telegraph has it and if so the prospects of a hockey team in the future is just that much brighter.

Your editorial re the "Roll of Honor" in the issue of Jan. 13th, Mr. Editor, was very timely and commendable. We of this district are right behind the movement. As one who has shared many a happy hour (and not always a quiet one) with our enlisted boys and knowing most of them intimately, it would be a pleasure for me to assist in gathering this information. So friends, you may get a call from your scribe (borrowing a term from the Lindbrook columnist) in the near future. Anyone inadvertently missed, we hope, will forward the data either to me or the Mercury.

In the above we should have used the term ex-scribe for we see by last week's paper that we have a new writer. Well at last! And after looking for one for so long and apparently always in the wrong place. Best wishes from the district, newcomer, and a long stay.

Recently I saw:

Ben Tiedeman hurrying westward in a leisurely fashion.

Morris Stewart casting an appraising eye over his woollies.

The records of the Beaverlodge Experimental Station show that the autumn of 1943 was the finest experienced in the history of that farm. There was only .49 in. of rain in October, no measurable precipitation in November and a mere 13 in December. The only zero reading in the latter months of 1943 was -1.9 degrees on December 26th.

THE SPRING LITTER JUST AROUND THE CORNER

(Experimental Farms News)

Possibly the best insurance of strong healthy litters next spring lies in the proper feeding and management [illegible] e. The [illegible] ing sows [illegible] and thrift of the pigs at birth, but [illegible] of the sows [illegible] it is [illegible] sow as one of the favoured animals on the farm [illegible] pigs [illegible] of Animal [illegible] Experimental Farm, Ottawa.

SEEDTIME and HARVEST

By Dr. K. W. Neatby,
Director, Agricultural Department
North-West Line Elevators Association

Production Objectives—Or Expectations?

For two years, Dominion and Provincial Government [illegible] have announced definite production objectives in plenty of time for farmers to plan their own programs. The 1944 objectives [illegible] month ago, have had time to 'soak in.' Will they be met?

In looking over the published figures, I, for one, find it difficult to distinguish between hopes and expectations. The Dominion-Provincial Conference [illegible] increase in wheat acreage but [illegible] view of the relation between the price of wheat and other farm produce, and the [illegible] wheat acreage reduction [illegible] a considerable increase is probable.

● The figures published for oil seed crops are puzzling when [illegible] in the light of Mr. Gardiner's statement, as quoted in the "Farm News Press Clip Sheet, No. 424," which reads in part, "Of [illegible] products, such as oil producing plants (crops) . . . it is hoped that some improvement in [illegible] will be accomplished." But the 1944 "objective" for oil seed crops is given, on the same [illegible] acres—only 66% of the 1943 acreage! For what it [illegible] the opinion that [illegible] win and the [illegible] loss, unless the price for flax [illegible] fixed at a very attractive level.

● The farmer will be [illegible] largely by what [illegible] what the United Nations [illegible] has, to some extent, [illegible] the former for the [illegible] go so far. We mustn't [illegible] get flax without paying [illegible]

COMMENCE ATTACK ON HORSE BOTS NOW

Early winter is the time to get in a telling blow against the swarms of bot flies which may plague horses in the summer months. The logical procedure [illegible] all horses at one time in the district. LAKESHORE

January Jottings:

If variety is the spice of life our Lakeshore pupils should be finding school time highly seasoned. They have had three teachers in the time space of less than a month. Miss Craig was transferred to Viking about the middle of January and the school taken over for two weeks by Mrs. Warner Jr., who was followed by Mrs. Steen this week. Lakeshore was very fortunate having two such capable teachers to take over. It was no easy task to step into a position held for several years by so efficient a teacher as Miss Craig. We were lucky indeed, to have her services as long as we did. However we're glad to know that in these days of teacher shortage we can get an experienced and proven teacher to carry on for the rest of the term. At a farewell party held at the school for Miss Craig, she was presented with a fountain pen from the people of the district and a trio of framed pictures from the school children, tokens of our appreciation of her good work and our best wishes for the future.

Mrs. Geo. Francis is expected home about the middle of February from Ontario where she went about a month ago on receiving the sad news of her mother's death.

The annual meeting of the Lakeshore War Workers was held at Mrs. Glen Bailey's. The same executive were returned to office (under protest!) for the coming year. The financial report showed a small bank balance, and since the meeting a bridge party was put on by the "North East Corner" members at the hall, and members of the southern and western sides are racking their brains and searching their wallets for ways and means of raising their quota. At the meeting a motion was passed to the effect that each member write one of the local boys each month, the letter to be sent before the end of the month, and written to the boy whose name was paired with the member's name.

Mr. J. H. Johnston assisted R. H. Phillips to construct a brooder house for turkeys. Mrs. Phillips hopes to raise a large flock this year. Here's luck to her!

Bridge has enjoyed a come back this winter hereabouts. Perhaps it's just that the fine weather and open roads so unusual for this slack time of year make it possible for farmer folk to get together for a game.

There's a great load of hatching eggs going down the road every week. With such favorable weather conditions we hope every producer has more than his quota to ship and that no one will be disappointed in not getting his order for broilers or layers filled this year.

Things we never expected to see but have seen within the last few weeks:

Such perfect January weather.

Tofield Boys Praised When Nazi Outwitted At Ortona

DARING EXPLOIT SUCCEEDS

With the Canadian Forces in Italy, Jan. 31—A Canadian with imagination turned the tide in the battle for Ortona with a trick which outsmarted even the battle-wise Germans.

He was Maj. Bill Longhurst of Edmonton, company commander of the Loyal Edmonton Regiment, who, his fellow officers say was the spearhead of the final drive to clear the town of the enemy. A captain when the battle began he was promoted major in the field "for distinguished conduct."

The Germans found an answer to every Canadian move in the early days of street fighting in the Adriatic coastal town last month.

Then Longhurst devised a plan for clearing out the enemy, and at the same time keeping his own men under cover. He talked it over with another company commander, Maj. Jim Stone of Peace River, Alberta, and put it into effect after Christmas.

Pioneers using "Beehives" blew openings in the walls on the top storeys of houses, and infantrymen entered these and worked their way downstairs clearing the Germans room by room and floor by floor.

While the riflemen were room cleaning, Pioneers blew a hole into the next house, and once a building was cleared the soldiers climbed back upstairs and entered the next. There was never any need to go into the open except where there were gaps between houses.

"I never saw the men happier because they weren't in the street," said Longhurst who left Canada early in the war as a corporal. "They cleared houses from the top down, and were on top of the Germans before they knew it."

The whole company worked as a team, Longhurst said, "and not one man let me down," but he paid special tribute to his sergeant G. A. Campion of Tofield, Alberta and to the Pioneers who arranged the explosives.

L. Cpl. P. B. McBratney, who was raised in Tofield, being the son of Mr. and the late Mrs. T. McBratney, and whose sister is at present staying at Tofield and Cpl. J. H. Johnson, Barrhead, were the Pioneers he praised specifically. On one occasion when an igniter failed they returned to a building and while one held the fuse the other lighted it with a cigarette or match.

The Canadians got so close to the enemy they overheard an officer talking about reinforcements coming up for the paratroopers. They found out where the reinforcements were going to be, and prepared in advance demolitions "which took care of them."

The Edmontons, who lost more than 20 men in a house the Germans blew up, felt they had partly evened the score.

Longhurst's house-to-house advance carried his company to the cathedral square on the far side of Ortona. The Canadians drew back during the night, but their advance was a turning point in the battle and by morning the next day the enemy had left town.

The above constitution was drawn up by Mr. A. Bigland and to whom the League signified their appreciation with a vote of thanks. It was moved by M. W. McDonnell and seconded by G. Allan that the Constitution be accepted. Carried.

The Sec. Treasurer gave a report to the meeting on the progress of the membership, etc. To date the League boasts of a membership of 68 paid up members.

Need For Nurses Great

An increase of 1,800 student nurses is shown in enrolments at various schools of nursing across Canada since the outbreak of war, yet many demands for nurses still cannot be met, according to a statement issued by Miss Marion Lindeburgh, president of the Canadian Nurses Association.

The national registration of nurses held in March 1943, revealed that while 30 per cent more nurses are now employed in hospitals throughout Canada than in 1939, the demands for nursing service in civilian hospitals have exceeded this increase.

"To meet growing demands for nursing services has been one of the challenges offered to the Canadian Nurses Association since the outbreak of war," declared Miss Lindeburgh.

In discussing developments in the Canadian Nurses Association, Miss Lindeburgh stated that a representative meeting of the Executive Committee was held in Montreal recently when it was decided to ask the federal government to authorize a grant in 1944. Miss Lindeburgh said that with the grants given to the C.N.A. since 1943 the association has financed 123 bursaries for post-graduate work by nurses in 1943, in addition to supporting many other activities which have done much to stabilize nursing service in Canada. Those benefiting from these awards come from all parts of the Dominion. As a result of the education work of the C.N.A., Miss Lindeburgh reported, the enrolment of nurses in universities in 1943 is the largest recorded in Canada.

SEEDING TIME

The importance of starting plants early enough in the spring by sowing seed indoors in window boxes or hotbeds cannot be over emphasized if the best results are to be obtained from the plants of those crops that should be produced by that means, states T. F. Ritchie, Division of Horticulture, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa.

As a rule from six to eight weeks prior to the time when such plants can be set out in the field will be about the right time for sowing the seed. When seed is sown earlier than this it is difficult to produce stocky, vigorous plants without giving many extra transplantings or subjecting the plants to severe checking in an effort to prevent excessive growth.

Experiments have shown that plants that have made continuous unchecked growth from the time the seed was sown until the plants were set out in the field gave the best returns. The popular, old theory was that to get early maturity it was necessary to sow seed early and transplant a number of times, as well as to subject the plants to severe hardening off before planting out time. This old method resulted in doing much unnecessary work and in many cases produced disappointing returns. It can safely be said that the best financial returns result where well grown stocky plants are used.

When seed is purchased growers are reminded that only the best seed of recommended varieties should be obtained.

Jews Take Their Place In Active Service

There are 1,500,000 Jews on active service with the armies of the United Nations, according to a study made public by "Trend of Events", a newsletter published in New York. These represent 14 per cent of all Jews in Allied countries. Over 100,000 of them have been either killed, wounded or captured. These figures do not include Jewish guerillas operating in Russia, Poland, Yugoslavia, Greece and other European countries.

Official figures issued six months ago by the British War Office estimated that 50,000 British Jews were in the Army, Navy and Royal Air Force.

Over 12,000 Jews are serving in Canadian combat forces according to figures compiled and published by the Canadian Jewish Congress.

Over 12,000 Australian, New Zealand and South African Jews are in uniform.

In the United States, 500,000 Jewish men and women are serving in the armed forces according to figures published by the Jewish Welfare Board of New York.

Half a million Russian Jews are serving with the Red Armies. They occupy the third place among the peoples of Russia in the Red Army and Navy according to official figures published in October 1942.

In Palestine, 30,000 Jews volunteered for services with the British forces; in addition 20,000 serve as policemen and in the home guard.

80,000 Jews enlisted in the French forces when war broke out, half of them refugees who had found asylum in France. Many of them are now serving in Italy, North Africa and Syria.

20,000 Jews are serving with the Polish Army which was organized after the defeat of Poland in 1939; they represent over 12 per cent of the total personnel.

60,000 Jews in the Polish forces were taken prisoner in the first year of the war.

The "Trend of Events" survey concludes: "When these facts are summarized, it is clear that the Jews in the Allied armies represent a very formidable force, larger than the Turkish and the Belgian armies put together and equal to those of many Allied powers who are regarded as co-belligerants and are treated in the councils of the United Nations on an equal footing."

Danish Accomplishments

Over sixty years ago Danish farming faced bankruptcy. Less than sixty per cent of the farmers held their land freehold. Prior to the start of the present war, ninety-four per cent of Danish land was cultivated by the owners. Danish farmers were responsible for a quarter of the total world exports of butter and eggs and for two-thirds of the British bacon imports. Denmark had the greatest concentration of the livestock in the world in proportion to the country's size and its population.

Resources and energy alone would never have raised Danish agriculture to its dominant position. There were two other highly important factors, namely the finest educational system in Europe introduced in 1864 by Bishop Grundtvig and the co-operative system of buying and selling.

OTTAWA NEWS LETTER

(Sponsored by the National Liberal Federation of Canada)

Ottawa—Post-war prosperity and security for the people of both rural and urban communities throughout the Dominion is the aim of the legislative program, covering almost every phase of national life, which Parliament began to tackle in earnest this week.

While solutions for the vast problem of getting back to a peacetime footing without sacrificing wartime standards of living are proposed, the measures planned are designed to promote the individual human welfare of those living on farms, in villages, towns and cities in all sections of Canada. In the width of its application to men and women in all occupations the new policy is unique.

For example, as one means of preventing inflation which, following the last war, resulted in an inevitable period of disastrous deflation and depression, price control is to be maintained. But to safeguard the earnings of those engaged in agriculture, legislation is to be passed this session for a price floor for staple farm products. As part of the general anti-inflation program, the ceiling on wages and salaries is to be continued.

One of the biggest innovations proposed in the social field is inauguration of a system of family allowances. This will take the form of monthly cash payments to families for each child of compulsory school attendance age. This will apply over the whole field of Canadian family life. It will benefit especially those in the low income groups who in the past have had no economic concessions from the government similar to the income tax exemption for dependent children of those with moderate or higher earnings. But it is significant that the allowances will be paid alike to families on farms or in urban areas everywhere in the Dominion.

Another measure which will help to assure prosperity for both country and town is extension of the Mutual Aid principle to purchase food and materials for relief and rehabilitation of peoples in the devastated areas of countries which have been occupied or partly conquered by the enemy. Thus a substantial part of Canada's billion-dollar mutual aid appropriation will be available to buy the products of farm and factory required to restore those countries which have borne the hardships of long and close contact with the conflict. Until now this fund could be used only for materials of war.

Even in the realm of reconstruction finance the proposals reach down to benefit small and medium sized industries ordinarily located outside the larger cities of the Dominion. To provide working and fixed capital for conversion of industries from war to peace production, a publicly-owned Industrial Development Bank is to be established as a subsidiary of the Bank of Canada. Unlike the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of the United States, the new government bank will not only be authorized to help smaller businesses and factories both to develop and convert them, but this function of its operations is one of the main purposes in setting it up.

In the opening stages of the session the government made it clear that winning the war is still the paramount task of the moment. At the same time the comprehensive program for social security and human welfare is being vigorously pushed and a solid foundation laid for averting dislocation and depression before the difficulties of transiting from war to peace create these national ills.

Developing of export markets when war demands decline is another problem being tackled in advance. At this session legislation will be passed to provide for the insurance or guarantee of export credits. That these will be used to promote the export of agricultural produce as well as the output of Canadian factories is promised in the throne speech assurance that the plan will be utilized to provide markets for both primary and secondary products.

The two other outstanding proposals in the social field are for nation-wide health insurance and contributory old age pensions, providing for larger payments to the aged than are already in effect. Both of these are to be liberally aided by payment from the federal treasury and if the view of the Dominion authorities prevail, will apply to all the people of Canada.

The health insurance plan as it will be presented to Parliament would provide free medical and dental services and hospital care for everyone. Under the present provisions of the British North America Act this system requires agreement of the provinces. It would be open for provinces to limit application of the plan to people below a certain income level. But this restriction will be discouraged by the federal authorities. The Dominion is considering increasing its contribution above the basis originally recommended by the Parliamentary Committee which drafted the bill after long investigation. This would have the purpose of reducing the small weekly payments individuals are to make under the plan so that it would be available to everyone without hardship. Under the federal Act everyone, regardless of their ability to pay the small individual contribution, would be entitled to health services without charge. The major part of the cost would be paid jointly by the Provinces and the Dominion.

Though a tremendous advance in the social and economic spheres over anything ever before proposed for Canadians, observers here believe the announced program is not the complete policy of the Government. It is felt that it indicates the direction the administration will take and points the way for further progressive measures along the same line.

Preserve Rations Are Increased

Ottawa—Value of D coupons for preserves will be doubled on and after February 3, the Wartime Prices and Trade Board announces. Because of the improved supply position housewives will now be able to purchase 20 fluid ounces of canned fruit per coupon instead of the original 10 fluid ounces.

Housewives will also be able to purchase 40 ounces of maple syrup, and four coupons will now buy a gallon. This increase is effective until May 31, after which the quantity will reduce to 24 ounces per coupon.

Likewise the ration of maple sugar is to be increased from half a pound to two pounds per coupon during the whole year.

Ration of jam, jelly, maple butter and honey butter increases from 6 to 12 fluid ounces, and molasses from 20 fluid ounces (one pint) to 40 fluid ounces (1 quart). Coupon value of corn, cane or any blended table syrup has been increased from 14 to 18 ounces, but cranberry sauce remains at a coupon value of 12 fluid ounces.

Provincial Officers Take Part In C.G.I.T. Week

Miss Pat East of Wetaskiwin, President and Miss Valerie Wheeler of Calgary, Vice president, representing Canadian Girls in Training in Alberta will take part in this year's C.G.I.T. program. These officers, elected at Camp Councils from Nova Scotia to British Columbia for the first time this past summer, represent forty thousand girls and are an added link in the national unity of Canadian Girls in Training, the programme of Christian Education for teen age girls within the Protestant church of Canada.

"Hasten Their Victorious Homecoming"

February 1st commences the greatest campaign ever instituted in Northern Alberta for the sale of War Savings Stamps. All food salesmen, distributors and merchants throughout the country are volunteering their services for the month in a patriotic effort to assist those who are fighting on the battle-fronts of the World.

The objective for North Alberta is only $40,000. If each of the 85,000 families who live here would contribute $1.00 per week, $340,000 would be obtained during the month, so $40,000 is small indeed.

When buying Stamps you are not giving—you are saving—16 Stamps will purchase a Certificate bearing interest at 3 1-2 per cent. This means that every $4.00 invested in War Savings Stamps will return you $5.00 in 7 1-2 years when converted to Certificates.

The real value of your Stamp purchases is the contribution to the war effort—each Stamp sold will buy eight rounds of Commando ammunition; six round rifle or machine gun. Two stamps will provide a Soldier's water bottle or medical kit. Eight Stamps a hand grenade; nine a steel helmet. $3.00 worth of Stamps provide an anti-tank mine and so on down the line. It takes $3,500 to buy an ambulance, so buy lots of Stamps so that ambulances will not be required. "Hasten Their Victorious Homecoming" — BUY STAMPS.

Prairie Fires In January

The month of January is nearly ended and it has been one of exceptionally fine weather. Chinook winds have been blowing consistently and they have dried up vegetation to such an extent that great prairie fires were running around Calgary on January 19. One swept from west of Calgary close to the northern part of the city, destroying six homes, many stacks of grain and hay and burning a number of livestock to death. Another occurred in the Turner Valley district which did extensive property damage and menaced some of the refineries and storage tanks.

The continued drouth is worrying farmers. Sub-soil moisture is the lowest it has been for many years. Even if considerable snow is received before the end of the winter, the crop will have a poor start in the spring. It will take frequent and heavy rainfalls during May, June and July to develop a good crop.

As Alberta's livestock has increased in numbers to a considerable extent, a good grain crop is necessary to provide abundant feed. However, there is a considerable farm carry-over of grains which will help out in case the 1944 crop is below average.

THE WORLD OF WHEAT

By R. G. L. Strange

THE FARMER'S RESPONSIBILITY

All kinds of discussions are taking place these days concerning the after war responsibilities of the United Nations, of Canada and of different sections of the Canadian people, and about what particular duty each of us should perform.

The farmer's duty and responsibility, however, is pressing, clear and beyond dispute. It is merely to make each acre of [illegible] produce food to its very utmost; both for the sake of humanity at large which needs more food, and for the sake of the farmer and his own family.

Spring is rapidly approaching, and the thoughts of farmers are now turning to seeding time. Again there is one clear and beneficial action all farmers can take that will aid each acre to produce the most food, which is simply to use the best seed available; for we know from bit[illegible] experience that a crop of high yield and high quality cannot be produced from poor seed.

No better investment, therefore, can be made by any farmer than to purchase a few bushels of high quality Registered or Certified seed sealed in the sack and to sow this on a few acres of good clean summerfallow. The product from these few bushels in a year or two would soon provide enough excellent seed to sow the whole farm.

Winter Feeding Of Dairy Cattle

The balancing of rations for his stock is of interest to the farmer, and the scientific ratios and percentage of the various constituents are of value in pointing out the ideal. With this in mind, the farmer endeavours to approximate the ideal as closely as is consistent with every day usage.

Rule of thumb methods are useful and the following suggestions have been obtained by our office of information from D. H. McCallum and J. E. Bowstead.

In feeding dried roughage give all the good quality hay a cow will eat without waste. This is around 2 to 2 1-2 pounds daily for each 100 lbs. live weight of cow.

In feeding grain to cows testing 4 per cent butterfat or less, feed 1 lb. of grain mixture daily for each 2 1-2 lbs. of milk in excess of 15 lbs. To cows testing 5 per cent butterfat or over, feed 1 lb. of grain mixture for each 2 lbs. of milk in excess of 10 lbs. As a general rule it is not considered profitable to feed grain when the production of Holstein or Ayrshire cows is less than 15 lbs. daily or when the production of Jersey or Guernsey cows is less than 10 lbs. daily. Moreover, it seldom pays to feed a cow more than 16 to 18 lbs. of grain mixture daily. Excessive feeding of grain may seriously affect production by throwing the cow off feed.

FARM ORGANIZATIONS—

WHILE PERHAPS, LIKE TRUE poets, good farmers are born and not made, and even left to himself a real son of the soil will make progress, there is still room and a need for farm organizations. Within the past two weeks two farm organizations have held their annual conventions and judging by the number of resolutions passed at each convention there is a keen interest among farmers generally for an improvement in agricultural conditions. As in life itself it is not to be expected that agricultural conditions will ever become so perfect as to require no adjustment or improvement. A fairly good example of this was shown when we recently published a table showing the cost and profit in connection with raising pigs for several different years. It only seems the other day that one of the most repeated statements heard was "There is good money in pigs," yet a study of the table showed that while this might have been true in 1938 or 1942 it certainly was not true in 1943, because if the figures in the table were correct the net return per pig in 1943 was just about half what it was in 1942. The figures were supplied by the Alberta Dept. of Agriculture. An interesting feature of the table was while 1943 gave the highest return per dressed pig, it gave the lowest net return of the six years for which figures were given. Increased cost of feed was the chief reason. The situation is not quite as bad as it appears, as in most cases the farmers who sold the pigs also grew the feed that they were fed with. But the illustration does show that even when agricultural conditions reach a stage where they are fairly satisfactory to producers it is not long before from some cause or other, conditions change.

Therefore a well directed agricultural body, watching out as it were, for the interests of farmers in general is necessary. In order to make the most of his opportunities to serve his country, his family and himself, a farmer has many problems to solve and many injustices to combat. Markets, tariffs, machinery costs, transportation costs, all at some time or other have laid a heavy hand upon him sufficient to squeeze out what profit there was in a season's operation. And while we see no real need for the average farmer to be everlastingly carrying a crying towel, there is a need for an organization strong enough and with prestige enough to convince the powers that are or may be, that those things the farmers are asking for are necessary for the welfare of good citizens.

Even while the agricultural products of Canada vary considerably from province to province, there is a bond of fellowship as well as an economic bond existing between all earth farmers and animal husbandmen throughout the Dominion.

This bond of fellowship could be expressed in one central organization with headquarters at some central point in the Dominion. Provincial branches of the parent organization could become affiliated with this central body and thus, under one name and one banner, with the prestige of all Canadian agriculture behind them could requests or just demands be made upon governments, other organizations or even company or private businesses. The success of such an organization could depend upon a few simple things, good management, good sense and adequate support.

Probably due to the fact that the Farmers' Union Convention was held in Edmonton and the U.F.A. Convention held at Calgary, greater coverage was given the Farmers' Union Convention in the northern Alberta daily papers. It seems just a short time ago that news reports of Farmers' Unions began to appear and we believe most people were surprise at the size of the convention and the rapid increase in membership. There were between three and four hundred delegates at the convention and a quoted membership of 17,000. In this connection we should mention that M.D. of Beaver is quite well represented in farm organization inner circles, Councillor Logan being 2nd Vice-president of the Alberta Farmers' Union and Councillor Moen a director of the Wheat Pool. So in the M.D. of Beaver at least the farmers' interests should be well guarded.

THE COMMUNITY LEAGUE—

IT IS WITH NO small degree of pleasure that this paper welcomes into the life of Tofield and District the Tofield Community League. The need for such an organization has long been felt and many opportunities to advance the welfare of the district have been missed through there not being such an organization. Even though the first meeting was held without much publicity we still think it a good move and as far as we are able, intend to help it to thri[illegible]

We note with considerable interest that one of the main objective is the erection of a community hall, having for many years cherished just such an idea. In fact had it not been for the outbreak of war, effort along this line would have been commenced long ago. A sum approaching the $400 mark had been accumulated in the sports day committee account and while nothing official had been said conerning it, conversations between members of the committee regarding using the money as a nucleus for a community hall fund did take place. Then in one swift move more than half the money was turned over to different organizations for patriotic purposes. One cannot find fault with generosity, all one can do is to decide according to their own light whether such generosity was wise.

We are still at war and if anything, Canada is in it deeper now than in 1940-41. Almost every night young men, some of them little more than boys, take off and fly the heavens, constantly flirting with danger and death. Every day and night men and ships pound the waters of the seven seas, meeting and warding off danger from above, below and on the surface. Every night and day artillery roars and infantry attack—and casualty lists are printed. A community organization formed anywhere in Canada must not forget these things, and what energies and talents they have and use should be devoted to furthering the cause for which these men are fighting and to the end that their lot now may be brighter and their length of stay away shorter. Without the likes of these men Canada could easily be another Holland, Denmark, Norway or even Poland.

As a newspaper and individually we are not of the fire eating militaristic type. Trade and commerce are more to our liking. But whether Canadians like it or not, war embodying heroism and savagery such as the world has rarely seen is upon them, boys in their teens and early twenties are keeping our homes safe, and strong men facing fire and flood so that nourishment may continue to come our way. We feel that any organized body at this time should take stock of these things.

BRITISH AGRICULTURE

Lord de la Warr, chairman of the Agricultural Research Council of the United Kingdom, addressed the Canadian Club in the U.F.A. convention last week. He gave an interesting picture of agriculture in Great Britain during the war years. He said agriculture is still the largest single industry there and produces about 210 million pounds worth of food a year. Farming is more mechanized in Britain than in any other country in the world. There are 180,000 tractors. Acreage [illegible] cultivation has increased from 12 million to 16 million. 85,000 land women help with the work. Prior to the war, Britain was only 45 per cent self-sufficient in food, now it is 70 per cent.

The speaker said that any return to pre-war policies of treating agriculture as a sideshow would be utter folly. Seventy per cent of the world's population is engaged in agriculture and their welfare is vitally important to the welfare of the rest of the population. The farmers of Canada, the United Kingdom, Australia and Argentina and all over the world are common sufferers from an economic mistake, the speaker maintained. There should be an international get-together and all work out a common policy so that agriculture might be maintained in a prosperous condition. To promote stability there must be a great deal of control of external and internal markets in international trade. There must be agreements after the war between exporting and importing countries with regard to quantity and price. The only alternative will be a return to "the law of the jungle" economics of the pre-war system.

Lord de la Warr said that enormous production would be necessary in the postwar years to feed the starving millions of Europe. It is hard to imagine the condition of the people in Greece, Poland, Norway, France and Belgium. In order to restore Europe and prevent utter chaos these hungry people must be fed. The only hope of the future is that all should think in terms of a policy wherein all will co-operate. —Alberta Wheat Pool Budget

Warble Fly Control

The province wide warble fly control campaign in Alberta is getting under way, and District Agriculturists throughout the province are spearheading the attack of this pest in their districts.

J. L. Eaglesham, Supervisor of Pest Control, advises that assured supplies of warble powder will be ample, but care should be taken that no wastage occurs. The supply of derris, a constituent of warble powder, is limited, and the importance of warble fly control in our production programme is indicated by the measures taken to restrict the use of derris, almost entirely, to the armed forces and for this emergency warble fly control programme.

The annual loss per animal in Alberta is estimated at between 5 and 10 dollars. 60 per cent of Alberta hides are known to be unfit for fine quality leather due to perforation by the warble grub. In addition to damage to hides, milk and beef losses are considerable. No animal can be expected to produce to capacity if tortured in the summer by heel flies or irritated in the winter by acting as host during the earlier stages of the insect.

A wide effort to eradicate the pest is anticipated and although some 160,000 head of cattle were treated last season, it is hoped that the response this year will result in at least doubling that figure. The benefit—both financial and otherwise—of warble fly treatment is so obvious after the first use, that cattle owners who are familiar with the results usually incorporate treatment for this pest as an integral part of their operations. The time for action is almost here. Control measures should begin early so that no warbles drop from the animal before treatment is applied. This may necessitate some cattle owners giving the first treatment as early as February 15th.

Although individual effort is commendable, community effort provides the real control. The Department is looking towards many warble free areas in this province, and if members of communities will get together and have all cattle treated, the district can be made free from heel flies for several years.

A special effort is being made to arrange for at least one retailer in each community to handle a supply of warble powder, but anyone who is unable to obtain his requirement locally is asked to contact his District Agriculturist.

Sunflowers — A New Grain Crop

(Experimental Farms News)

Until recently the production of the sunflower in Canada was restricted chiefly to its use for ensilage in areas not suited to the production of corn, and to a lesser extent in the garden, where it served to provide seeds which were eaten much as peanuts are, or as a border flower.

Interest in the sunflower as a grain crop came about largely because of the shortage of edible vegetable oils in Canada soon after the outbreak of the present war, states Dr. T. M. Stevenson, Dominion Agrostologist, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa.

The ensilage varieties which were tall growing and late maturing, were not suited as a grain crop in most areas. However, other types were available. Canadian plant breeders had, some years prior to the outbreak of war, recognized the possibility of using the sunflower as a grain crop, chiefly as a source of vegetable oil. They set about to develop varieties suitable for grain production on a large scale. They decided first of all that such varieties must be semi-dwarf in habit of growth and early maturing so that they could be harvested satisfactorily by ordinary farm machinery. Furthermore, the new varieties had to meet certain standards of perfection respecting oil content and oil quality.

The two outstanding varieties which resulted from that work are "Sunrise" and "Mennonite". Approximately 30,000 acres of these varieties were grown for grain in the prairie provinces in 1943. It is estimated that this crop will yield over 18 1-2 million pounds of seed. This crop is capable of providing 4 1-2 million pounds of high quality edible oil and more than 2,250 tons of excellent, high protein oil meal suitable for stock feed. In addition there will be an abundance of seed available to enable us to meet the 50,000 acre objective set for 1944.

The development and production of sunflowers for grain constitutes another worthwhile contribution from agriculture to the war effort.

FORAGE CROPS ENCOURAGEMENT POLICY

The establishment of a permanent type of agriculture in this province is dependent on a more general use of forage crops. Adequate soil conservation, practical weed control, successful live stock production and efficient farm management require the employment of grasses and legumes in the cropping programme.

The Alberta Department of Agriculture has designed its Forage Crops Policy to lend definite encouragement to farmers who wish to purchase forage crop seed. This encouragement consists of making grass and legume seeds available to farmers at cost, freight prepaid, and the establishment of numerous agencies throughout the province where farmers may obtain information as to prices, place their orders and later, take delivery of their seed. Information and recommendations pertaining to forage crop seeding and management practices prepared by agricultural authorities will also be available from these agencies.

There is a strong demand for Alberta grown grass and legume seeds on the export market and much of the 1943 production will have moved out of the province before the spring of 1946. The Department of Agriculture has reserved considerable quantities of grass and legume seeds for Alberta farmers, but the supply is definitely limited, and orders can only be accepted while these reserves are available.

Seed shipments will arrive in the early spring and farmers will be notified as to the date on which delivery will be made. The District Agriculturist will plan to be present at that time, and would be glad to discuss seeding and management problems with those who are taking delivery of seed.

Order Certified Seed Potatoes Now

Certified seed potatoes are being withheld from export to meet the requirements of Canadian growers, but, the Plant Protection Division, Dominion Department of Agriculture points out, demands for these potatoes from other countries are very strong. Supplies not needed for planting in Canada should be released for export in March before the season in the U.S.A. is too far advanced for planting. This means that orders for certified seed potatoes should be placed without delay while supplies are still available.

The planting of certified seed potatoes for table stock will give a heavier yield from each acre planted to such seed. Seed potato growers are reminded that fields entered for certification in 1944 must be planted with either "Foundation" or "Foundation A" seed.

Grandma and the Sea Gull

By Louise Dickinson Rich in the Womens' Home Companion

GRANDMA AND MRS. WILCOX moved, as brides, into next-door houses on the sleepy elm-roofed Main Street of the tiny town in which they were to live out their lives. I don't know what started the war between them, and I don't think that by the time I came along, over 30 years later, they remembered themselves. But it was still being bitterly waged.

Mind you, this was no polite sparring match. This was War Between Ladies, which is total war. Nothing in town escaped repercussion. The 300-year-old church almost went down when Grandma and Mrs. Wilcox fought the Battle of the Ladies' Aid. Grandma won that engagement when she was elected president, and Mrs. Wilcox resigned in a huff. But Mrs. Wilcox won the Battle of the Public Library, getting her niece Gertude appointed librarian instead of my Aunt Phyllis. Grandma stopped reading library books — "filthy germ things" they'd become overnight. The Battle of the High School was a draw. The principle got a better job and left before Mrs. Wilcox succeeded in having him ousted or Grandma in having him given life tenure of office.

In addition to these major engagements there were constant sallying and sniping back of the main line of fire. When as children we visited my grandmother, part of the fun was making faces at Mrs. Wilcox's impossible grandchildren—nearly as impossible as we were, I now see—and stealing grapes off the Wilcox side of the fence. We chased the Wilcox hens, too. One banner day we put a snake into the Wilcox rain barrel. My grandmother made token protests but we sensed tacit sympathy and went merrily on with our career of brattishness.

Of course, Mrs. Wilcox's grandchildren retaliated. Grandma had skunks introduced into her cellar. Never a windy washday went by but what the clothesline mysteriously broke, so that the sheets wollopsed around in the dirt and had to be done over. Some of these occurrences may have been acts of God but the Wilcox grandchildren always got the credit. I don't know how Grandma could have borne her troubles if it hadn't been for the household page of her daily Boston newspaper.

Besides the usual cooking hints and cleaning advice, this household page had a department composed of letters from readers to each other. If you had a problem you wrote a letter to the paper, signing some fancy name like Arbutus. That was Grandma's pen name. Other ladies who had had the same problem wrote back and told you what they had done about it, signing themselves One Who Knows or Xanthippe or whatever. Very often, the problem disposed of, you kept on writing to each other for years through the column of the paper, telling each other about your children and your canning and your new dining-room suite.

Grandma and a woman called Sea Gull corresponded for a quarter of a century and Grandma told Sea Gull things that she never breathed to another soul—things like the time she hoped that she was going to have another baby but didn't, and the time my Uncle Steve got you-know-what in his hair in school and how humiliated she was, although she got rid of them before anyone in town guessed. Sea Gull was Grandma's true bosom friend.

When I was about 16, Mrs. Wilcox died. In a small town, no matter how much you have hated your next-door neighbor, it is only common decency to run over and see what practical service you can do the bereaved. Grandma, neat in a percale apron to show that she meant what she said about being put to work, crossed the two lawns to the Wilcox house, where the Wilcox daughters set her to cleaning the already immaculate front parlor for the funeral. And there on the parlor table was a huge scrapbook: and in the scrapbook, pasted neatly in parallel columns, were her letters to Sea Gull over the years and Sea Gull's letters to her.

Grandma's worst enemy had been her best friend.

That was the only time I ever saw my grandmother cry. I didn't know then exactly what she was crying about but I do now. She was crying for all the wasted years which could never be salvaged. That was the day when I first began to suspect what I now believe with all my heart:

People may seem to be perfectly impossible. They may seem mean and small and sly. But if you will take ten paces to the left and look again with the light falling at a different angle, very likely you will see that they are generous and warm and kind. It all depends on the point from which you're seeing them.

Whist and a musical contest were played before the important part of the afternoon took place, honors going to Mrs. Gill and Mrs. Coombes. A prettily decorated wagon, piled high with many gifts, was drawn in by little Patricia Torrie and Yvonne Wiley. The gifts were presented by Mrs. Torrie. The bride was assisted in opening the many parcels by her bridesmaid, Miss Gladys McLennan. After all had been passed around and admired, a lovely lunch was served by several ladies. We all join in wishing the newlyweds the best of luck and happiness.

FIGURES, FIGURES, FIGURES

This week's issue of the Mercury it is needless to mention, contains the annual rural municipal financial statement. This year's statement is for the enlarged Municipal District of Beaver and is larger and made up in a different style to former M.D. statements. The statement only became available to us on Saturday and up to time of writing our chief interest in it has been mechanical, that of getting it into type. Later we will probably peruse it for interesting items to pass on to our readers. As a statement it is something entirely new, that is, a statement of a newly constructed body and therefore no similar statement can be referred to to show whether the M.D. is going ahead or backward.

Perhaps an apology is due those readers who do not relish municipal statements as entertaining reading matter, for taking up so much space with one. All we can say is that it is important business to all ratepayers and appears but once each year.

We believe a simplified abstract would be more easily understood by the general public.

MINSTREL SHOW ON FEBRUARY 18th

It is some little time since a Minstrel show was staged at Tofield and the news that one is to be given on Friday, February 18th, will be welcome news. So far few particulars of the actual program have leaked out, but it is safe to say that sparkling entertainment is in store for those who attend and that many of the old minstrelly melodies will be heard as well as modern adaptations of the minstrel theme. For a pleasant evenings entertainment plan to attend the minstrel show at the Variety Theatre on Friday, February 18, at 8.30

M. D. OF BEAVER NOMINATIONS SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 19th

The Annual Meeting of the M.D. of Beaver will be held at the Ryley Community Hall on Saturday, February 19th at one p.m.

In addition to hearing the report of the Reeve, Secretary-Treasurer and Councillors, nominations for the office of councillor will also be received by the Returning Officer.

There will be three vacancies to fill on the council due to the expiry of terms, namely Reeve Ovens, Division 1; Councillor Giebelhaus, Division 7, and Councillor Swabey, Division 5.

It will be remembered by some that at the inaugural meeting on March 9th, 1943, Councillors' names were drawn out of a hat to determine length of office. This was done so that all members' terms should not expire at the same time. Councillors Anderson and Logan were drawn to serve three years; Councillors Moen and Lucas two years, and as stated, Reeve Ovens and Councillors Giebelhaus and Swabey, one year.

SUPPORT DEMANDS CAR LICENSE CUT

Demands of the Alberta Motor Association for a reduction in motor car licenses have been followed by support for the movement in fresh quarters.

In annual convention in Edmonton the Alberta Farmers' Union, which has a membership of over 17,000, passed a resolution calling for a reduction in motor car and truck licenses. It asked that the fees be cut at least as low as they are in some other western provinces.

Commenting on the A M A.'s campaign for lower licenses, the Edmonton Journal said it was understood the request was receiving "favourable consideration" at the hands of the government.

It [illegible] is claimed, the government has indicated that those motorists who are on a minimum allowance of gasoline, being in the "AA" category are certain to be given reductions in car license fees this year.

As the provincial legislature in Alberta will meet on Feb. 10, it is anticipated that there will be an early decision by the government.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT DECEMBER 31, 1943

In order to try and clear up any misunderstanding which may exist to ratepayers, the Board of Trustees have the following to say with regard to the Building and Emergency Fund transferred to Savings Account and amounting to $2000 00. In making the estimates for 1943, the Board decided to commence a fund for future building requirements and any emergency which might arise. It was realized that classes are being held for Room number 2, or Grades three and four, in the basement of the main building. Those who have visited this room cannot help but observe that health conditions are anything but satisfactory, at least three being quite evident, namely, light, heating and ventilation. General Shop and Home Economic classes are held in the former Methodist Church building, and Women's Institute respectively, both located in the centre of the Town and not at all desirable or handy to the main school grounds. Late in the fall contract had been arranged to have the entire heat circulation plant rebuilt and brought up to date in the main building, but due to lack of help and material this has not yet been commenced. The question of toilet facilities has also been under consideration and had improving these facilities been altered as contemplated, the fund transfer would not have been more than $1200. The Board was aware that any major alterations or building programme could not be considered at present, but the object was to set aside funds sufficient over a period to try and rectify the deficiencies mentioned above. Under the School Act a Board of Trustees may accumulate funds for the above purposes, aside from the ordinary requirements and salaries, which by the way have reached no mean figure in the aggregate. General observations are to the effect that education is occupying a very important place and the aim of any School Board is a worthy one, when it endeavors to supply qualified staff suitable facilities and comfortable surroundings for pupils.

In conclusion the Board would be pleased at any time to have any of the ratepayers at their meetings to discuss the affairs of the district and to receive constructive suggestions.

Find Food Problems Great German-Controlled Dutch

"Vittles and drink are the chief of my diet", sounds very comfortable when there is enough food to be had. Right now in some countries it would be much easier if people did not need food.

News coming out of Holland tells how hard it is in that German-controlled country, to get enough food for simplest wants. Between the Nazi confiscation of supplies and the Nazi control of what is left the people have a fight to get enough to eat—standing in long queues, using available substitutes and buying in the Black Market.

Eggs and meat are rationed out most sparingly. Between April 12 and May 15, 1943, citizens over 21 were allowed to buy only one egg. Those under 21 could buy two but each egg was worth 30c so it would take more than the $2.20, which is the wage some workmen earn for a full day's work, to buy only 8 eggs! Everyone is allowed a piece of meat every two weeks—but the piece is so small that the Dutch are making a joke about it. They say the butchers are responsible for the shortage of cigarette papers because they use them for meat wrappings.

This year many Canadians were standing in line to buy Christmas candy. This is far removed from the bitter reality that forces Dutch housewives to queue up in the cold at 4 a.m. on meat and vegetable days, knowing that if they have not the strength to wait patiently their families may have to go without these essential foods.

With food so scarce and Nazi control so harsh it is no wonder that those who are able to will deal on the Black Market, paying such fabulous prices as $6 for a pound of butter; $65 for a pound of coffee; $160 for a pound of tea balls; $1.45 for a loaf of bread, 50c for a pound of potatoes, 50c for a quart of milk, and so on.

The use of substitutes for real food is widespread. Despite the Nazi ban on such use of the exportable crocus and tulip bulbs, the ingenious Dutch make them into coffee and grind them up to mix with flour. Bread flour often contains 4 per cent bulbs.

The following is a Dutch recipe that may interest Canadian cooks. Ingredients include chestnuts, carrots, potato peelings, soda, talc and flour made from bulbs or white beans. Result: an ersatz cake, made for a real people who are living for the time being in an ersatz world.

C.W.A.C. Important Military Body

In the dark unforgettable days of 1940, His Majesty the King used these inspired words to his peoples:

"Let us go forward to that task as one man, a smile on our lips and our heads held high, and with God's help we shall not fail."

To the peoples of the hard-pressed British Empire listening then to that great pronouncement of faith and courage it seemed a task whose fulfillment was almost impossible. Now, four years later, surrounded on all sides by the signs of Victory, with the Atlantic Charter uniting all nations who are lovers of freedom in the fight for its preservation, those grim days seem very far away.

That the people of England, of Canada and for the whole Empire rallied as they did under their inspired leaders is one of the great miracles of history. That miracle could not have been accomplished without the whole hearted self-sacrificing effort of every member of those nations.

There is one aspect of this total war effort about which can be praised and that is the work which has and is being done by women, and particularly by the women of Canada.

When the war broke out, women's organizations all across Canada began approaching the government for permission to form auxiliary branches to the three fighting services. But it was not until August, 1941 that an Order-in-Council authorized the formation of the Canadian Women's Army Corps as an auxiliary. In September, the first recruits enlisted and by March, 1942, the Corps had grown so greatly in numbers that it became part of the Canadian Army, Active.

The Canadian Women's Army Corps is NOT an auxiliary. It is an active force and save for actual combat duties its members serve in all things exactly as do the men of Canada's army. The women who enlist to serve in the Canadian Women's Army Corps wear the general service badge; this means that they have enlisted to serve anywhere in the world; for the duration of the war and for a period of twelve months thereafter, should His Majesty so long require their services.

Any woman who is between the ages of 18 and 45; who is physically fit with at least grade eight education and who has no young children dependent upon her may enlist in the CWAC.

She will receive 80 per cent of the pay of the men as well as clothing allowances and free issue of all kit and uniforms. If she is married to a man in the services she will continue to receive her dependents allowance. She will also receive dependents allowance for any close relative whose support she is, with the exception of young children.

When a girl decides to enlist in the C.W.A.C. she takes a medical examination first of all and if she is successful in passing this, she is then attested and sworn into the Corps. This means that she takes her oath of allegiance to Her King and Country and to the Army. This oath is as binding as that taken by the men.

Then, having been issued with her kit, she goes, if she is a western girl, to Vermilion where No. 2 CWAC basic training centre is established in the fine buildings which formerly housed the Agricultural College. Here she will learn drill, marching, first aid, self-protection from gas warfare and all the things which will turn her into a good soldier. Above all she will learn that she is now a part of a unit numbering over 12,000 Canadian Women.

She will discover that there is a comradeship and a Corps of spirit with her sisters in uniform—the value of which will endure long after the war is over.

The code of law by which Armies throughout the British Empire are governed is the King's Regulations and Orders. This applies to the women of the CWAC with certain logical alterations.

The work of the CWAC officers as administrators of the Corps is secondary to their work of looking after the welfare of the girls who serve under them. They are not set apart and unapproachable. Courtesy is paid them at all times because they proudly wear the King's Commission. But the officers work every bit as hard as the other ranks—a great deal harder. No girl in the CWAC need ever be unhappy in her job or in any other way. She has only to go to the officer under whom she works and talk things over and receive every possible help and encouragement.

A Chartered Bank is

ONE WHICH COMPETES WITH NINE OTHERS

for your business

These ten competing banks are:

Bank of Montreal
The Bank of Toronto
The Canadian Bank of Commerce
The Dominion Bank
Imperial Bank of Canada
The Bank of Nova Scotia
The Provincial Bank of Canada
The Royal Bank of Canada
Banque Canadienne Nationale
Barclays Bank (Canada)

A chartered bank is the custodian not only of your money on deposit but also of your secrets concerning that money.

A CHARTERED bank is an institution where the details of your bank account are kept secret.

It is called "chartered" because its permission to do business and the conditions and restrictions under which it may do business, are contained in a charter granted and kept up-to-date by parliament, the finest democratic free institution of government that man has yet devised. This charter is an Act of Parliament laying down all of the conditions which safeguard your money.

Ten competing chartered banks are the very opposite of a State Monopoly such as would come about if all the banks were rolled into one by nationalization. Under State Monopoly, if you failed to get accommodation at the one bank, you could not go to any one of nine others to seek it. You can today.

TOWN NOMINATION DAY THIS COMING MONDAY

Nomination day for both the Town of Tofield and the Tofield School District will be held on Monday, February 14th. Nominations for the office of Town Councillor and School Trustee will be accepted by the returning officer at the Town hall from 11:00 a.m. to 12:00 noon.

The present council consists of the following: W. C. Swift, Mayor; Councillors Beirnes, Bellamy, Clutterham, Francis, Hammond, Letourneau. Messrs. Hammond's and Letourneau's terms of office expire this year and it will be necessary to elect two councillors to fill these vacancies. Councillor Hammond will probably stand for re-election while Councillour Letourneau has left Tofield to take up residence in Ryley. Town councillors are elected for a period of two years.

The Tofield School Board at present consists of A. F. Bigland, A. J. Harrison, C. Patterson, A. C. [illegible], Geo. E. McFadzean. Of these A. F. Bigland, A. J. Harrison and Geo. McFadzean retire due to expiry of term. Town school trustees are elected for two years.

If at the close of nomination time, twelve noon, Monday, February 14th, there are sufficient candidates nominated, an election will be held one week later, on the following Monday, February 21st. Polling will take place at the Town Hall. Next week's issue will carry a list of those nominated.

HELP I.O.D.E. BOOST SALE OF WAR SAVINGS STAMPS

The I.O.D.E. will be making a special appeal to citizens during this month to buy War Savings Stamps. It is expected that a house to house canvas will be made extracting promises from householders to buy at least one stamp per week. It is hoped the ladies will meet with fine response. And of course the Miss Canada girls will continue to do their bit in promoting the sale of these stamps.

Mr. and Mrs. Bob Smith and children of Edmonton spent the week end at the Kimmitt home.

TO THE ELECTORS OF DIVISION THREE OF BEAVER M.D.

Once again an election for councillor in Division 3 is approaching. I would like to solicit your support on voting day.

Our division has many problems but I feel that the biggest and most important is still that of building and maintaining our roads.

Due to war conditions we found it very difficult last year to secure a road crew and repairs for our machines. Owing to the extremely wet weather last summer, wash outs and culvert replacements caused our money, not to mention time, to be soon spent.

I believe that over a period of two or three years it would be possible to give practically all of the ratepayers a good road to the gravel leading from both the north and the south. It would be my aim to try to do this.

The division is large and no doubt many of the ratepayers are not informed regarding what roads are being built and repaired, etc. If fortunate enough to be elected again I would put a statement of some form in the Mercury showing every two or three months what has been done.

I have tried in the past to help with and take a sympathetic interest in all indigent and relief cases and would continue to take that attitude.

Thanking you sincerely for your co-operation in the past and again hoping that you will support me in the coming election, I remain,

Yours faithfully,
JOHN WILLIAM SWABEY.

WEDDING

DAVISON—FINDLEY

On Monday, February 7th at 7 o'clock, a wedding of particular interest was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. Findley of Ryley, Alberta, the Rev. D. K. Allan of Tofield, officiating.

In their home an arch was made of yellow and white streamers and among many friends and relatives, Fern Elizabeth, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. Findley of Ryley was united in marriage to William Ralph Davison, only son of Mrs. Ralph Davison of Tofield.

The bride gowned in a gold two-piece crepe ensemble with brown accessories, wearing a gold pendant, a gift of the groom, and wearing a corsage of red roses, entered the living room on the arm of her father, to the strains of the Wedding March played by Miss Lorna Hay of Ryley, Alberta.

Her attendant, Miss Gladys McLennan of Ryley was attractively dressed in an afternoon dress of mauve wool, with brown accessories, wore a corsage of pink carnations.

Mr. Clifford Appleby of Tofield supported the groom.

During the signing of the register, a solo "Through The Years" was beautifully rendered by Miss Lorna Hay, accompanied at the piano by Mrs. Albert Hales of Edmonton.

After the ceremony the bridal couple received congratulations and good wishes from their many friends.

Following, a buffet supper was served and a toast to the bride was given by Mr. J. L. Hay of Ryley and responded to by the groom. Rev. D. K. Allan was toastmaster. A few words to the bride was proposed by Dr. J. L. McPherson of Ryley. The wedding presents, which were many and varied, were beautifully displayed in the sun room.

A three-tiered wedding cake beautifully decorated was placed in the centre of the bride's table.

Final Meeting of First Year M.D. Beaver

With a few words of appreciation from the Reeve and an expression of forward looking ideas and sentiment by the Deputy Reeve, the M.D. of Beaver No. 489, closed its final meeting of the first year of its existence. There was little to mark the meeting from any other except perhaps that business was not quite so heavy and there were no delegations.

The meeting was held at Ryley on Friday, February 11th, there being present: Reeve Ovens; Councillors Anderson, Giebelhaus, Logan, Lucas, Moen and Swabey.

Minutes of the previous meeting were adopted as read.

Correspondence read included letters:

From Bk of Montreal, Tofield. They stated that up to the present municipal loans had been charged five per cent interest and they were now pleased to announce a lowering of the rate to four and a half per cent.

From Old Age Pension Board regarding the pensions of four individual ratepayers.

From Mothers' Allowance Dept. regarding the allowance of three individual ratepayers.

From Edmonton Hospital Advisory Committee regarding hospital agreements. There was a simplified form of agreement to be signed. This agreement which includes the Edmonton hospitals and a number of rural hospitals allows for a reduction of fifty cents per day from the account of bonafide residents of the M.D. occupying public wards. In return the M.D. guarantees the hospitals against loss through non payment of hospital fees by M.D. residents.

A bylaw covering such agreement between the M.D. and Edmonton and some rural hospitals was given its first and second reading.

A relief request was read and after consideration by council it was decided to allow applicant $10.00 per month and pay a store bill of $9.00.

From F. A. Mann saying that due to ill health he had been compelled to take Mrs. Mann to a home and arrangements made for the account to be sent to the M.D. However, ultimately the account would be paid by him.

Meeting adjourned for lunch.

Reassembling at 1:30 letters were read:

From Ryley Mutual Telephone Co., asking for payment for moving posts. These were moved, so it was stated, due to some road building and the Company felt they should be re-imbursed.

Council was of the opinion it could not accept responsibility for payment for moving posts.

The secretary was instructed to write to Mr. Lennock and say that arrangements made some months ago must be completed at once.

From the Union Tractor and Harvester Co. reporting on application for priority which had been recommended. This involved the possible purchase by the M.D. of a large scraper and tractor.

From Mr. A. J. H. McCauley who requested information regarding the rental value of the front portion of the M.D. building at Tofield.

On the motion of Reeve Ovens, Councillors Anderson and Swabey were appointed a committee to arrange rental terms with Mr. McCauley.

From Bert Cornelius who desired to purchase S.W. 10-50-20-W4, offering $300.00 for same. Councillor Anderson said it was rough land chiefly suitable for pasture. On Councillor Anderson's motion the land was sold to Mr. Cornelius at his offer of $300. Terms to be $100 down and balance $50.00 per year, interest at three per cent until due and five per cent after due. It was also agreed that these interest rates be adopted for all time land sales.

From Roman Koydruski who desired to purchase lots 8-12 in the hamlet of Poe. This was held over for further attention.

From Mr. Ole Snortheim re the purchase of some land. As the sale of the land desired by Mr. Snortheim would involve the disposition of an aged resident owner, Mr. Snortheim's letter was tabled.

From Mr. P. A. Roum who desired to purchase S.W. 28-48-17 at $850.00. Mr. C. E. Johnson also wrote regarding the same quarter offering $1000. Councillor Logan valued the quarter at $850. It was decided to sell the quarter section to Mr. Johnson at $1000.00 and a bylaw covering the above was given its first and second reading.

From Mr. Tony Zak of Bruce. Mr. Zak desired to purchase W half of N.W. 18-47-14 and offered $3000 for it. On the motion of Reeve Ovens this land was sold to Mr. Zak at the above figure and a bylaw covering the same was given its first and second reading.

From Fitzmaurice and Fitzmaurice regarding N.W. 25-48-12 W4. They desired to effect a sale. On the motion of Reeve Ovens the matter was tabled.

From Mrs. J. P. Hanson who desired to purchase lots 5 and 6, hamlet of Poe.

From National Grain Co., Winnipeg, who desired to purchase lots 1 and 2, hamlet of Poe.

From Carl S. Lindbeck who desired to purchase lot 7, hamlet of Poe.

All the above lots were sold at $12 per lot with the exception of those sold to the National Grain Co. which sold at $18.00.

The usual monthly financial statement was checked.

From Patriquin and Johnstone, auditors re annual financial statement. The auditors stated that the books and records were in excellent condition and that they received complete co-operation when making the audit.

On the motion of Councillor Logan the financial statement was adopted.

A formal resolution covering some adjustments with M.D. of Norma was passed.

The Reeve announced that in conjunction with the M.D. elections a trustee for the Viking Municipal Hospital district would also be elected. One trustee would be elected for most of Division One and a portion of another division.

Moved by Reeve Ovens that election of trustees for hospital district be by divisions. This year division one and a little territory in division seven will elect a trustee. Carried.

Mrs. Cecil Louise Owen requested a reduced assessment on S.W. 7-52-2. Secretary was requested to write and inform Mrs. Owens that a formal appeal against assessment should be made in the Spring.

Mr. Arthur Auch of Lavoy wants an approach from the road to his farm. Councillor Giebelhaus was asked to attend to this.

The third reading was given to five by-laws. These covered sales of land and lots decided upon at previous meetings. All land sales are subject to the approval of the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

On the motion of Councillor Swabey a number of accounts as read were passed for payment.

On the motion of Councillor Giebelhaus the allowance to a ratepayer was recommended to be increased.

Regarding the sale of N.W. 16 and S.W. 21-48-17 W4, it was expected that Mr. E. H. Share of Ryley together with the occupant of the farm would be in to interview council. As they had not arrived, Councillor Logan moved that secretary write Mr. Share and resident on farm to interview Council at its next meeting. Carried.

Enquiries having been made regarding the purchase of one or both safes which the M.D. own, on the motion of Reeve Ovens a price of $85.00 was placed on the small one and $300.00 on the large one.

Councillor Anderson spoke regarding the work of the council during the past year and said that in many respects it was an adjustment period. Even so, some work had been accomplished and this M.D. was second to be ready for the audit. But he did believe that now was the time to be laying plans for the future so that amalgamation having been brought about, good use could be made of it. There were now quite a few enlarged M.D.'s and he thought it a good idea if a committee of two were appointed to visit one or two well established enlarged districts and see how they were operating. Upon this suggestion Councillor Anderson and the Secretary were appointed a committee to visit the M.D. of Wainwright and another M.D. to be selected.

Councillor Moen thought that provision should be made for more help in the office. At present it was necessary for the staff to work much at night which was not good for either the office or the staff. A discussion took place as to the merits of an extra person in the office as against the purchase of a book-keeping machine designed to handle municipal work. It was left to the secretary, as the person most effected, to make investigation and report on

Man Killed On North Road

Peter Boergen, 28, of Ryley was instantly killed about 6:30 Tuesday when a load of wood turned over and fell upon him.

The accident occurred near the Booth home and members of this family were first to reach the scene of the accident. Alvin Steen who lives close by also reached the scene. The man was dead upon arrival.

Dr. Cutaungavich, coroner, was called from Holden and an inquest found to be unnecessary.

The unfortunate man leaves a wife and was in the act of moving from near Ryley to the A. Roberge farm when the tragic accident took place.

THE M.D. BEAVER FINANCIAL STATEMENT

In connection with the Expenditure of Public Works table in the Municipal District Financial Statement, there is a slight correction to be made. Those regularly receiving the Mercury will note items "Grant Adjustment," "Relief Labor". This is incorrect. There was no relief labor and the items should read "Grant" where it says Grant Adjustment and "Adjustment" where it says Relief Labour.

The statement is somewhat different to previous years but a careful reading will disclose much information of municipal affairs and finance.

OUTLINES PRESENT FEED SITUATION

Outlining the present feed situation in Canada, J. C [illegible] Feeds Administrator, Agricultural Supplies Board, in an address to the meeting of the Yorkshire Swine Breeders' Association, held recently at Toronto, indicated that Canadian feed grain stocks were adequate for the crop year. However, distribution from western surplus areas to eastern shortage areas presented a major problem in view of the huge quantities of grains to be moved and the wartime demands upon transport facilities for the movement of other equally important goods. The supply position in Eastern Canada had been safeguarded as far as possible through subsidies to encourage forward buying by feeders and dealers and by the establishment of a stockpile, carried at Government expense, in eastern elevators. With regard to early buying Mr. Davidson cautioned that feeders should endeavour to keep supplies on hand in advance of immediate requirements in case of temporary shortages in supply due to transportation difficulties.

Protein feed supplies, he said, were unequal to the heavy demand. Soybean meal which was formerly imported in substantial quantities was now difficult to obtain. Imports, where obtainable, were subsidized but only limited quantities could be secured. Exports were rigidly controlled. The use of a combination of animal and vegetable proteins in hog feeding would give satisfactory results and spread short supplies more equitably. Heavy flour milling and export restrictions had nearly doubled the quantities of wheat millfeeds available before the war. Because of their wide popularity with feeders, and their price relationship to other feeds, they were still short of the [illegible]

LUCKY FOR LYLE

Winnipeg, February 14— It was lucky for Lyle Phillips, three years old, that Jacob Bay happened to be looking out of a bus window. Lyle was playing on the bank of the Red River in Winnipeg. When Bay, returning home after his day's work at the Canadian National Railways' Transcona shops, glanced out of the window he saw the child fall through the thin ice. He reacted immediately, yelled to the bus driver to stop and jumped out. He clambered down the river bank, crawled over ice that broke under his weight and had a struggle to get out himself after hauling Lyle out of the water and flinging him to safety. Bay is employed in the freight shop and on the repair track.

HORSE SENSE IN HORSE HEALTH

Veterinary authorities point out that in this mechanical age there are farms on which the horse is one of the most neglected animals. Horse blankets are almost unknown and the curry comb and brush have long since disappeared. About the only redeeming feature on some farms is that the horses are allowed to run out, so they have the opportunity, at least partially, to take care of themselves. Yet the horse is still one of the most valuable sources of farm power. Proper nourishment is extremely important to the horse's well-being and is one of the three essentials in maintaining the health of the horse. The second essential is that when a horse is not working he should be given the run of the pasture or a lot large enough to afford ample exercise. The third is that the horse should have a good shelter to protect against severe wind and cold.

FOOD INDUSTRY'S WAR SAVINGS STAMP DRIVE

Results of the Food Industry's War Savings Stamp drive for North Alberta show another $10,100.00 added to $16,296.00 for the first week making a total of stamps sold to date $26,496.00.

With two weeks still to go it would appear that the objective of $40,000 is assured, and with continued enthusiasm this figure should be greatly exceeded.

Most country points are responding admirably but there are still quite a number of committees still to be heard from.

THE HOME PAPER

By Edna Jaques in the choice volume of poetry "Beside Still Waters."

An old man was reading the home town paper of a little place in Ontario that he hadn't seen for forty years but he still took the paper, searching it eagerly for news of old old time friends. No offense is intended to the owners of any papers.

Four little sheets, it's printing smudged and blurred
And yet the old folks read it word for word,
They're living at the Coast . . . and all they know
Is back there in a land of wind and snow.
That's why they left, they couldn't stand the cold,
For blood runs thin, and sluggish when you're old.

And now they sit among their blooming flowers
In solid comfort . . . yet the summer hours
Drag by and there is nothing much to do,
No baking . . . when you only cook for two,
You buy the bread . . . and Dad just [illegible]
To passing long, long, hours with a book.

They love their little garden and the way
The lawn stays green . . . and in the month of May
The trees flame out like brides to greet the spring,
And all the holy bells of heaven ring
Across the lawn where daisies and [illegible]
And hold communion in their sunny beds

Yet when the old home paper comes
They gloat above it, all the tiny crumbs
Of news, they gather up like miser's gold;
Pour over all the paragraphs and [illegible]
The sheets aside and talk with eyes ag[illegible]
Of dear old neighbors of the long [illegible]

For every item is a personal thing,
They know the folks, and so the columns ring
Small bells within their hearts, for they can see
The faces of old neighbors tenderly,
(And though they go their lonely ways apart Still they are members of a small town's heart.)

WHEAT SURPLUS GOING DOWN

"Deflation of the wheat surplus in 1944 now appears to be fairly certain." This statement was made by James McAnsh, editor of the "Monthly Review of the Wheat Situation," (January 28th) issued by the Dominion bureau of statistics. This is the most hopeful and most important comment on the wheat situation that has been made by the government department in many years. A year ago now, prospects for cutting heavily into the carryover looked none too good, but the situation has been changed completely in twelve months time.

There is no reason for jubilation over immediate prospects of liquidating the stored up wheat supplies. Mr McAnsh points out that on January 1st of this year Canada, Argentina, and Australia between them had a billion bushels of surplus wheat on hand. However, surpluses are on the decline and signs point to a continuance in their reduction. For instance, in the United States it is estimated half a billion bushels of wheat will be fed to livestock in the 1943-44 crop year.

	(mil. bus.) 1942-43	1943-44
Argentina	235	261
Australia	156	97
Canada	556	394
United States	981	836
Total	1,928	1,488

In his survey, Mr McAnsh refers to the wheat situation in 1917-18, the last year of the first world war. He says that wheat then was more precious than Kimberley diamonds and some six months after the United States entered the war the people of that country were asked to observe "wheatless Wednesdays". In the early part of 1918 they were asked to adopt two wheatless days per week and at least one wheatless meal per day. There is no danger of any such wheat shortage being experienced in North America during the present war even if the huge pile of surplus wheat accumulated during the present war diminishes in stature this year. —Alberta Wheat Pool Budget.

—V—

BIRMINGHAM, ENGLAND: There are about 1,000,000 people in Birmingham. They put into war savings last year a total of 44,000,000 pounds ($132,200,000) about half of which was in small amounts.

WHAT FARMERS FEAR

Between the years 1936 and 1942, Canadian farmers increased their production of food by 45 per cent. While improved weather conditions were to a certain extent responsible for increased food production, the main cause was the urgent demand for same due to the war. To meet this demand farmers extended their operations, particularly to livestock production to the utmost of their physical ability.

It will indeed be a tragic thing if this increased productivity on the part of Canadian farmers results in huge surpluses and very low prices when the peace years come. That is the eventuality farmers dread more than anything else. It should not be permitted to occur. — The Budget.

TO RAISE WHEAT DELIVERY QUOTAS

Maximum wheat delivery quota for the present crop year which ends July 31st has been increased from 10 bushels per authorized acre to 18 bushels. This means that producers will have the opportunity to deliver 18 bushels of wheat per authorized acre during the present crop year. This announcement was made in the house of commons last week by Hon. J. A. McKinnon, minister of trade and commerce.

It should be clearly understood, however, that there will not be an immediate raise of any quota to the 18 bushel level. First the lower points will be raised and a general 10 bushel quota established throughout the west. Then as the wheat is delivered and moved out of the country, higher quotas will be established until finally the 18 bushel figure is reached. — Wheat Pool Budget.

LONDON: Because of the earnings of her merchant marine, the fourth largest in the world, Norway has been able to pay her own way all through this war. That is not all. The Royal Norwegian Government in London has also managed to meet pre-war obligations, and has paid interest and amortization instalments on Norwegian foreign loans.

Health Certificates for Seed—A Definite Post-War Plan

At present, there is [illegible] laboratory where farm[illegible] obtain information on the [illegible] health of seed samples. It is impossible to obtain maximum [illegible] of high quality grain, makes the following considerations receive due [illegible]

1. Pure seed of a suitable variety.
2. Good cropping and tillage practices.
3. A high percentage of seeds capable of vigorous germination.
4. Absence of seed-borne diseases or provision for control.
5. The quantity and kind of weed seeds in the seed.

Our post-war plan includes these tests (3, 4, 5).

Item three has engaged our attention for three years. Confidence in our tests has been well maintained and demands on the service have increased as follows:

1940-41 — 4,934 samples
1941-42 — 9,083 samples
1942-43 — 11,078 samples

Judging from receipts to date we shall probably test about 13,000 samples this year.

Many farmers are asking for information on seed-borne diseases, the necessity for seed treatment, and on weed seeds. As a result we have been authorized by our Line Elevator sponsors to announce, as a post-war plan, the expansion of our laboratory facilities so as to provide for a complete clinical examination of cereal crop seeds. For the first year, we shall undertake to make complete tests on wheat only, continuing with germination tests on oats, barley, rye and flax.

Canada must be prepared to meet competition on the world wheat market. To do so we must [illegible] [illegible] our reputation for high [illegible] in this the [illegible] [illegible] the individual farmer is our purpose.

To The Electors Of Division Three Of Beaver M.D. 490

Once again an election for councillor in Division 3 is approaching. I would like to solicit your support on voting day.

Our division has many problems but I feel that the biggest and most important is still that of building and maintaining our roads.

Due to war conditions we found it very difficult last year to secure a road crew and repairs for our machines. Owing to the extremely wet weather last summer, wash outs and culvert replacements caused our money, not to mention time, to be soon spent.

I believe that over a period of two or three years it would be possible to give practically all of the ratepayers a good road to the gravel landing from both the north and the south. It would be my aim to try to do this.

The division is large and no doubt many of the ratepayers are not informed regarding what roads are being built and repaired, etc. If fortunate enough to be elected again I would put a statement of some form in the Mercury showing every two or three months what has been done.

I have tried in the past to help with and take a sympathetic interest in all indigent and relief cases and would continue to take that attitude.

Thanking you sincerely for your co-operation in the past and again hoping that you will support me in the coming election, I remain,

Yours faithfully,
JOHN WILLIAM SWABEY.

LONDON: Every British bomber is now fitted with 16 cable-cutting devices, which are so powerful that they can cut through the heaviest cable in one-thousandth of a second. The devices weigh only a few pounds and are about the size of a brick. They enable bombers to sweep a field of operations clear of enemy barrage balloons before starting low-level attacks.

PLAN TO MAINTAIN HOG PRODUCTION During 1944 and 1945

Every good quality hog that can be produced during the next two years will be needed.

The current bacon contract is for two years. It guarantees bacon prices and the delivery of 900 million pounds of bacon over the contract period. To help Britain maintain her present weekly ration of 4 oz. for each person Canada will try to deliver 600 million pounds of bacon this year.

IMPROVE QUALITY

Quality premiums of $3.00 for each Grade A carcass and $2.00 for each Grade B1 carcass have been authorized. They increase the net profit in hog production and emphasize the urgency of improving quality to protect the after-the-war position on the British market.

Hog Production is Profitable

After allowing reasonable feed allowances and liberal overhead charges to cover all possible costs the following net returns can now be expected from feed grains fed to hogs:

Wt. of Hog Live Lbs.	Selling Price per 100 lbs. dressed	Value of Hog	Quality Bonus B1 Grade	Returns per Hog	Returns for grain	Value of grain per 100 lbs.
200	$15.00	22.50	2.00	24.50	17.50	1.75
[illegible]	15.50	23.25	[illegible]	25.25	18.25	1.83
[illegible]	16.00	24.00	[illegible]	[illegible]	19.00	1.90
200	16.50	24.75	2.00	26.75	19.75	1.98
200	17.00	25.50	2.00	27.50	20.50	2.05

Grade A hogs on which $3.00 Quality Bonus is paid will return an additional 10c. per hundred for the grain used.

THE M.D. FINANCIAL STATEMENT—

FOR SOME YEARS past we have run a kind of commentary on the M.D. financial statement, dubbed in a hurry "Explanation Column". This year there is more hurry than ever as while the statement is about twice as large there is but one publication day before the annual meeting. So for this year at least, we won't attempt to go into detail but rather just give a few suggestions as to "getting results" from the maze of figures presented.

In money at the end of the year, is the M.D. richer or poorer than at the beginning of the year? Here's the answer. The total cash worth of the M.D. on January 1st, 1943, was $84,523.26 and at December 31st, 1943, was $86,398.72, a cash gain of $1,875.46. However before this cash gain came about, hundreds of thousands of dollars had been both received and expended and while the cash gain is real enough it does not tell the whole story. How these hundreds of thousands of dollars were spent and received is all listed in the columns headed "Receipts (General)" and "Payments (General)" and both columns balance at $405,962.18.

Did the M.D. spend more than it received or receive more than it spent? The answer is to be found in the Revenue and Expenditure Account, general section. The total revenue was $255,234.21, and the total expenditure $251,135.14 which shows $4,099.07 more taken in than spent out. The remarkable thing is that in the receiving and expending of such a large sum of money in one year is that the receipts and expenditures should come so close.

"Expenditure on Public Works" is usually an interesting table and we find that over $61,000.00 was spent on public works last year. Some divisions were "over spent" and some "under spent".

LOOK OUT FOR BRUCE—

THERE HAS BEEN quite a run on real estate in the hamlet of Poe recently, so much so that Reeve Ovens is casting a quizzical eye at the landscape and asking what has Poe got that Bruce hasn't got? Anyway with lots at Poe selling like hot cakes at $12.00 a lot and a distinct slump in the real estate market at Bruce with lots at a much lower figure, something will have to be done. It doesn't seem quite right that Poe of sedate literary background should outstrip a place with such a mighty and battle scarred name of Bruce, topped off so to speak with a western flavor all its own. However we expect Reeve Ovens and Mr. Stambaugh to go into a huddle and then look out for Bruce!

SPRING OFFENSIVE ON THE FARM FRONT

Food is the most important and all-pervading munition of war. Without food, war would be no more, and human life itself would become extinct. The accumulation of food stores before any offensive or other operation of war is the first imperative obligation of the successful military commander. He knows that, however brilliant his strategy may be it is bound to fail without the bodily sustenance of his men through the orderly delivery of food at the right place and at the right time. Every detail of supply and transportation must be thought out in advance and co-ordinated.

If the assembling of food entails such a responsibility on the military commander, what about the heavy load on the shoulders of the country's first great munitioner—the farmer who makes the assembly of food possible? In peace or war, year by year, the farmer undertakes a great spring offensive. Everything has to be planned in detail. As in the armed forces, nothing in the preparation for success on the farm may be left to chance.

A year before each spring offensive some seed has to be sown. The growing of good seed is an art in itself and before the best seed has been selected, it has been checked and re-checked. When at last, the seed has been chosen, it has to be cleaned to clear it of weed seeds and reject inferior kernels. It has then to be tested for germination and purity. The seed is the ammunition; the farm machinery the field guns and heavy [illegible]nance. The [illegible]tion of the soil parallels the choosing of the battleground on which victory may be best assured but before the ammunition is used it has been made certain that the "field guns" which sow seeds instead of shrapnel are in the highest working order. After the first wave of the offensive has passed, the heavy ordnance, in the shape of harvesters and threshers all in [illegible] class order, have [illegible] [illegible] for the final push in the harvest. All is not plain sailing. There is fair weather and foul. There are hazards and heartbreaks, but the farmer carries on. Food just does not happen. Its successful growing is the triumph of the farmer.

REFUSE REDUCTION IN GASOLINE PRICE

There will be no reduction in the price of gasoline, though the octane rating of No. 1 grade motor gasoline has been cut, according to information received by the Alberta Motor Association.

Also, it has been stated that the price of motor gasoline in Canada is below what it would be on an economic basis and that in some parts of the country there have been times when it would have been 14 cents per gallon higher, but for the price ceiling.

The recent cut in octane rating was said to have been necessitated by increased war requirements of aviation gasoline.

RED CROSS APPEAL

The Canadian Red Cross will make a national appeal for $10,000,000 in voluntary contributions throughout Canada starting February 28th.

In previous appeals the people of Canada have more than supported the cause and the generous response of the Canadian people in the last appeal showed their open-heartedness and understanding of the Red Cross work.

The Red Cross is an international organization and under the Conventions of Geneva, it required to obtain its support by voluntary subscriptions to preserve its rights, privileges and immunities guaranteed under International Law.

The national appeal in March was planned with the fullest co-operation of the Dominion Government to avoid disruption of plans of the National War Finance Committee. And too, the American Red Cross is making its national appeal during the same month, making it a continent-wide campaign.

The largest work facing the Red Cross during the current year is supplying food parcels for Canadian, British and Empire prisoners of war in Europe and the Far East. The Society now has five packing plants in Canada with a weekly production of 100,000 parcels. Of this amount the Canadian Red Cross donates 20,000 weekly for prisoners in Europe, the remainder being paid for by the British and Australian Red Cross Societies. Provision also has to be made for food, drugs and other supplies for Canadian prisoners in the Far East. These two objectives alone will require $6,500,000 during 1944.

The work of the Canadian Red Cross has never been greater and the need has never been greater. This year, it is hoped, will be victory year but the work of the Red Cross does not end with the cessation of hostilities . . . it continues wherever there is human suffering.

APPRENTICESHIP TRAINING PLAN ESTABLISHED BY DOMINION GOVERNMENT

Honourable Humphrey Mitchell, Minister of Labour, announces that an Order in Council approved recently gives authority to the Department of Labour to extend financial assistance to Provincial Governments, in order to stimulate trade apprenticeship training. Dominion-Provincial agreements on the subject are provided for.

For the fiscal year 1944-45 the Dominion fund available for distribution among the provinces is not to exceed $250,000. This sum will be raised to an annual $1,000,000 for later fiscal years.

The planned Dominion assistance is designed to supplement regular industrial apprenticeship training. Apprentices, while working at industrial trades, will be subject to working conditions and wage rates determined by the province under the agreement and will be paid by the employer in the usual way.

Each province must administer its share of the fund under an apprenticeship act or its equivalent, and will be required to appoint one or more apprenticeship committees composed of an equal number of representatives of employees and workers, together with representatives of Provincial Departments of Labour and Education.

Both ex-servicemen and civilians will benefit by the scheme. Where training of returned men is approved by the Minister of Pensions and National Health, the Dominion will pay full costs. In civilian cases, costs will be divided fifty-fifty between the Dominion and Provincial governments.

Commenting on the Order, Honourable Humphrey Mitchell, Minister of Labour, stated: "It is important for the welfare of our industry as a whole, that a sufficient number of our young people in the post-war world should be given trade training of various sorts, so that they may be among the most highly skilled workers in the world."

The Order defines an apprentice as "any person at least 16 years of age who enters into a written agreement with an employer to learn a skilled trade requiring a minimum of 4,000 hours of reasonably continuous employment . . ."

Assistance from the Governments will relate largely to the vocational or other school courses incidental to apprenticeship.

MERCURIAL DUSTS REPLACING FORMALDEHYDE IN SEED TREATMENT

Treatment of seed grain to control smut has been a common practice for many years. More recently it has been found that the use of a mercurial dust such as Ceresan, not only controls the smut but also reduces the damage to seed and seedlings from organisms carried in the soil. Formaldehyde may reduce the vigour of germination of wheat and it must not be used for hulless oats or flax says A. M. Wilson, Field Crops Commissioner.

In the fall of 1942 the strength of germination of grain was lowered by frost damage in certain districts of the prairie provinces. If formaldehyde is used on seed of this kind a further reduction in its ability to grow will take place. A reliable rule to follow would be to treat seed with mercurial dust such as Ceresan for the control of smut and other seed borne diseases. The strength of germination may be increased rather than decreased and the germinating seed may obtain some protection from soil borne organisms.

NEW JOB FOR PLANE

During a storm recently, the city of Moncton, N.B. was without electric power for nearly 24 hours. Since power for the Trans-Canada Air Lines transmitter at Moncton is dependent on outside sources for its operation, the disruption to the power lines called for emergency measures. A plane was towed from the hangar to the ramp and placed close up to the window of the transmitter room at the airport and a cable was stretched from the aircraft transmitter to the instrument panel in the operations room. Using the plane's transmitter, communications were maintained.

A Permanent Calendar

If you are conservative, don't read this.

If you are interested in reform, read this and ask the nearest Line Elevator agent for the printed circular dealing more fully with the same subject. He can give you a calendar which may, perhaps, be adopted for world-wide use, and which will serve year after year from generation unto generation.

This new calendar, the adoption of which is proposed by the World Calendar Association, is simplicity itself. It would divide the year into four equal quarters of 91 days each. The first month of each quarter would have 31 days and the other two 30 days each.

The observant reader immediately objects that this leaves one day extra and two extra in Leap Year, and that would mean that in less than a couple of centuries, winter would be coming in the summer and summer in the winter. This problem is overcome by having a Year-End Day (called Y) between the last day of the old year and New Year's Day. This would be a world holiday. Leap Year would be given due recognition by means of a day called L between June 30 and July 1, and it, also, would be a world holiday.

If this new calendar is adopted, Christmas Day will always fall on a Monday, and your own birthday will always be on the same day of the week. We quote from the American Scientist: "This revised world calendar is balanced in structure, perpetual in form, harmonious in arrangement."

Line Elevator agents will gladly order extra copies for use in country schools.

AGRICULTURE CAN USE MILITARY MECHANICS IN POST WAR PERIOD

After the war thousands of men now in the armed forces of Canada, who have had exceptional military mechanical training, will be demobilized. How many of these men can, by special vocational training in agricultural mechanization, be readily adapted to an agricultural works improvement program, merits immediate special attention. Dr. E. S. Archibald, Director Dominion Experimental Farms, told the delegates who attended the Annual Convention of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, recently held in Quebec city.

These highly trained mechanics with skill and courage", he said, "may be adapted to works programs fundamental to a better agriculture, for example in land drainage schemes which entail machinery such as ditching machines, draglines, bull-dozers, carry-all scrapers, various types of caterpillar tractors and many other types of machinery which have not been adapted to agricultural problems, but which can be economically used in a large-scale development program. This same training with the same types of machinery applies to flood control measures, soil conservation and other problems which require skilled engineers, soil experts and trained mechanics in numbers far beyond any previous conception.

"There is still another aspect of mechanical training as applied to agriculture which may be embodied in such national agricultural improvement works programs, including rural artisans' services such as carpenters, blacksmiths, machinery repair men, plumbers, electricians and the like. That these have almost disappeared from rural communities has, without doubt been due to the fact that the farmer has been in no position to carry on such works improvements. If a better agriculture is to be hoped for, which means improvement in our land, buildings, homes and community centres and our rural educational institutions, these artisans may well be established as part of our rural structure to the advantage of the nation as a whole."

Referring to the need for advanced agricultural college training in the post-war years, Dr. Archibald said the need will be really great for high-class graduate men in industry, based on agricultural products, more practical farming, more rural education in schools and high schools, and in many expanded phases of government activities in post-war programs. These men will include those requiring the highest type of training in the sciences pertaining to agriculture, including many intricate phases of research on which the future agriculture of Canada is so dependent. The agricultural colleges are not ready for such a huge task, and their need for these graduate students in release of buildings, more buildings, and more highly trained staff is obvious.

TWENTY NEW BOX CARS DAILY FOR CANADIAN NATIONAL

Winnipeg, February 14— Urgently required to handle the ever increasing war shipments which make up the bulk of freight traffic, 2,050 new all-steel 40-ton box cars are being delivered to the Canadian National Railways. The first has just been received from the Hamilton plant of the National Steel Car Corporation. It was a sample, built to specifications of the C.N.R. mechanical department. When the builders get into full production, 20 cars will be delivered each day.

THE WORLD OF WHEAT

By R. G. L. Strange

THE LACK OF AN INCH MEANT MILLIONS TO PRAIRIE FARMERS

This is a tribute to an outstanding Canadian farmer, Dr. Seager Wheeler of Rosthern, Saskatchewan.

As a boy, young Wheeler was refused by the British Navy because he was one inch too short. He emigrated to Canada, homesteaded, and became a seed grower.

Dr. Seager Wheeler won the World's Championship for Wheat five times. He is the producer of the best strain of registered Marquis, the famous 10B. He is also the original discoverer of Red Bobs Wheat, which today occupies 38 per cent of the entire wheat acreage of Alberta, and which variety, because of its early maturity, hence its ability to escape early frosts, has brought untold millions of extra dollars to prairie farmers. It is no doubt correct to say that for his years of hard work in selecting and re-selecting Red Bobs, Dr Wheeler has not made one penny of profit, but he has received something far more precious than money—an honorary Doctor's degree from Queen's University, the high respect, esteem and acclaim of his fellow farmers, and a membership in the Order of the British Empire, a high honour recently conferred upon him by the King.

Had Dr. Wheeler as a boy been an inch taller, he might today wear Admiral, but the lack of that inch turned him into a farmer, much to Canada's profit.

ITEMS OF INTEREST IN THE WORLD OF FOODSTUFFS

It is reported that insects and heavy rains during harvesting caused considerable damage to Argentina's wheat crop. Indian wheat acreage is less than last year and observers predict low yields unless weather conditions improve. It is feared that any severe changes in temperature might result in serious damage to Europe's winter crops, due to the advanced growth and lack of protection.

It has been announced that the bread ration in liberated Italy will be increased owing to substantial imports of foodstuffs from the United Nations. Canadian flour production in 1943 totalled 24,474,000 barrels exceeding all previous records. Condition of winter crops in the United Kingdom is reported satisfactory.

TO ISSUE FOOLPROOF GAS RATION BOOKS

Issuance of fool-proof gasoline ration books is to be made for the licence year opening on April 1, according to information received by officials of the Alberta Motor Association.

As in former years, the "AA" ration books will be issued by the provincial authorities when the new licences and stickers are obtained.

The ration coupons will be on paper specially manufactured for the federal rationing authorities. They will be colored according to the motorist's category. Another requirement which is of special interest is that drivers will be required to write the number of their vehicle across each coupon before the service station can supply them with gasoline.

The step is designed to prevent the wide distribution of loose gasoline coupons reported in some provinces. Under the plan it is believed that it will be difficult for any person to present a detached coupon.

SUNDAY, 20th FEBRUARY

A special appeal is being made for the famine stricken people of India and China

It is indeed an urgent appeal. Men, women and children are in dire need, millions are dying for the want of food and medical supplies

SOLDIER of the SOIL

THIS year the Canadian Farmer urgently needs help. He needs your help to produce the food so necessary for victory. Many thousands of farm workers are serving in the Forces, so that the farmer —the Soldier of the Soil—is shorthanded, but shorthanded as he is, he is called upon to produce more food than ever before. Food is one of the most powerful weapons of war. Grains, bacon, dairy products, eggs, beef, fruit, vegetables—FOOD to feed our armies, our allies and our people we must have.

WHAT CAN YOU DO?

You may be a school teacher, student, business or professional man, an office or store clerk—no matter what you are, if you have a few hours, days, weeks, or months of free time this summer, you can do your country and the farmer a great and patriotic service by [illegible] out on [illegible] farm. You may be inexperienced, but you still can help. You will find work on the farm healthy and congenial. It will give you the satisfaction of feeling that you have brought Victory nearer.

What you should do NOW!

Consult any special local committee or office established to deal with farm labour placements in your city or town; or Write the Director of the Dominion-Provincial Farm Labour Program at the Capital of your province; or

M.D. Of Beaver Annual Meeting At Ryley

On Saturday at the Community Hall, Ryley about thirty ratepayers assembled to attend the first annual meeting of this public body.

The meeting was called to order by Mr. N. L. Campbell of Holden who had been appointed returning officer. Mr Campbell announced the purpose of the meeting and called for nominations for chairman Mr. Campbell himself was nominated and elected chairman. Nominations for the office of secretary were called for and J. W. McMullen was nominated and elected secretary.

The chairman announced that as the M.D. of Beaver was a new body and there was no annual meeting last year, there would be no minutes to read consequently the meeting would pass on to the next order of business which was consideration of the financial statement. Copies of the financial statement were handed round by the reeve. H. G. Ovens and the secretary read the report in its entirety being relieved by the chairman when his vocal chords began to show signs of weakness.

Prior to commencing reading the report the Secretary announced that it was an entirely new form of statement and one designed by the federal government. The object was to have every municipal district in Canada use this form of statement and then government accountants at a glance could see how any particular municipality stood financially.

There was little comment upon the statement though one or two items excited comment.

A ratepayer requested information regarding the crop payments on land leased from the M.D. It appeared that the ratepayer was referring to some land from which the M.D. had not received its share of the 1942 crop. The question brought responses from [illegible] and Councillors Moon and Lucas, this being the gist of their remarks. In principle the Council believed in collecting and [illegible] to collect any rent due the district but there were several reasons why in a few cases the district so far had not [illegible] paid the amounts due it. The fact that a farmer could only sell so much grain had something to do with it; also that this was the first year of the M.D.'s existence; also that in dealing with many of these cases the historical background had to be un-

Ten Million Dollars Needed

From the beginning of this global war, the Canadian Red Cross has, through the support of its loyal volunteers, shouldered the responsibility of caring for the wounded and needy; bringing comforts and supplies to the Armed Forces; seeing to it that dried blood serum is available on all battlefronts, and turning out clothing and surgical supplies in astronomical quantities.

Now, with the most critical phase of war looming up, there is a call upon the energies and resources of Canadian Red Cross workers, unique in all history. It is not only for the crisis at hand, that vast preparations must be made, but for the aftermath.

For Canadian Red Cross services, contrary to some erroneous belief, will NOT ease down after the battle is won . . . the Armistice signed. In reality the drain upon resources will be expanded many times over

This is not like the last Great War, when some of the countries in Europe went unscathed. Europe is devastated . . . ravaged . . . stripped of its possessions as by a swarm of locusts. The people of Europe are homeless. Their possessions are what they can carry in their pockets . . . or a pitiful little bundle. They have nothing!

Not one item of supply turned out by Canadian women volunteers in Canadian Red Cross workrooms shall go to waste. Every smallest strip of material available will go toward the making of clothing and hospital supplies, and all the manifold necessities of just everyday living.

The Canadian Red Cross next week will ask for Ten Million dollars. This money will be dispensed with scrupulous care. It will be made to go a very long way. When you give . . . give for now . . . and what comes after. Canadian Red Cross needs your help. Be Generous!

Minstrel Show Huge Success

REPEAT PERFORMANCE NECESSARY

The Minstrel show sponsored by the newly organized Tofield Community League was a complete success in every way. Quite a few minutes before the curtain was due to rise on Friday evening, the Variety Theatre was jammed full, not even standing room being available. Quite a number of people were compelled to return home the hall being incapable of holding any more The show was repeated on Saturday night and it is safe to say that all those who desired to see the show had an opportunity of doing so Immediately prior to the raising of the curtain A.B. Clutterham gave a short address outlining the aims and objects of the present organization.

Immediately following the singing of O Canada, the curtain rose and the show was on.

There were the usual Minstrelly jokes interspersed with vocal and instrumental numbers all of which were good and some outstanding

H. Chandler's trombone solo, M W. McDonnell's saxaphone and G McFadzean's trumpet solos were well received, and . . a trio were exceptionally good.

R. Rasmussen's accordian playing also made quite a hit.

As a special addition to the program the little Misses Munro and O'donnel from a School of Dancing at Edmonton, entertained the audience with a number of novelty dances.

A very pleasing diversion from the minstrel theme was the quartettes rendered by the Misses M. Dodds; B. Stinson; M. Spence and Joyce Wiltzen.

The following composed the minstrel troupe: Interlocutor: Blake Clutterham; Geo. Holmes; Herb Chandler; M. W. McDonnell; Geo. McFadzean; Clark Lindgren; Matie Moen; Ray Rasmussen; J. Chalmers; A. C. Dodds; Father Schmeltzer; Art Francis; Mrs. C. Woods, pianist.

WORLD OF WHEAT

THE WHEAT SURPLUS IS DISAPPEARING

A few years ago many were considerably alarmed about the Canadian and World wheat surplus. Today that wheat surplus is disappearing to the extent that the United States has become quite alarmed about it. They are boosting their farmers to increase wheat acreage, they are importing materials from foreign countries that will take the place of wheat and they have planned to import no less than 175 million bushels of wheat from Canada during this current year.

On August 1st, 1943, Canada had on hand in elevators and on farms, 601 million bushels. By Aug 1, 1944 I estimate that Canada will have on hand in elevators and on farms not much more than 400 million bushels, and that the wheat surplus held by farmers on their farms will be almost down to normal.

What a Godsend this large Canadian surplus of wheat has been to the war effort of the United Nations, and how fortunate it is for us all that we refused to listen to that International Wheat Committee and others who some years ago tried to tell us that we should artificially cut down our wheat surplus.

This all proves the truth of the agelong belief ever widely held throughout the world, that it is a wrong thing to destroy, or to curtail the production of essential foodstuffs.

A WORLD PRODUCTION RECORD

With a reduction of nearly half a million workers on Canadian farms, production of farm products increased by 48 per cent over the production in the last year before the war. This is a record equalled by no other country in the world. —Alberta Wheat Pool Budget.

CHINA HAS PLANS FOR BIG RAILWAYS

Winnipeg, February di— "China anticipates tremendous development after the war and the yardstick will be railway transportation," says [illegible] L. Ken Chao, of the Chinese government department of railways, in Winnipeg inspecting Canadian National facilities and studying methods. "We have only about 9000 miles and we hope to build 100,000 miles of new lines in the first 10 years of peace. We have enormous natural resources that we ourselves and other parts of the world will need and we must get them to seaboard." The Chinese railways are operated by the government. Weather conditions are similar to those in Canada and Mr. Chao says he is gathering valuable information regarding operation and engineering procedure.

MEASUREMENT OF HUMAN PROGRESS

From the primitive horde through tribe, clan, community and nation we can measure human progress by the extent to which co-operation has been substituted for competition. It is the yardstick by which we measure civilization. History teaches us no surer thing than this, that the increasing purpose in human life of which the poet sings finds expression in human co-operation, which having carried the race from savagery to civilization will carry it on to universal brotherhood. — Wheat Pool Budget.

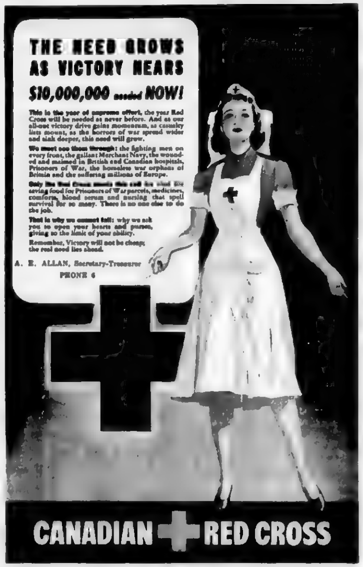
On Friday morning last every Member of the Alberta Legislature received an open letter signed by Rev. H. E. Nordlund, President of the Associated Temperance Forces of Alberta making a strong argument for the legislation the "dry" forces of the Province are seeking.

THE POWER OF YOUR HOME PAPER

The power of the weekly newspaper was amply demonstrated a few days ago when the Minister of Finance presented his budget to Parliament. Included in that budget was an appropriation of $125,000 for expanded study by the National Research Council into industrial utilization of farm crops.

Chemurgy—the research into conversion of surplus farm crops to industrial uses—was practically unknown in Canada prior to 1938. In that year Cecil Lamont, representing the Line Elevator Companies visited the principal research centres of the United States. His report convinced the Line Elevator Companies that a great field for expanded industrial use for surplus farm products was possible through scientific research.

The Line Elevators then pioneered a campaign for establishment of a Western division of the National Research Council dedicated to finding new industrial and edible uses for farm products. The weekly newspapers were [illegible] behind the advocacy of this plan designed to bring greater prosperity to agriculture. Their judgment has been vindicated. Today we find millions of bushels of wheat and other grains being used for industrial purposes. The reduction in the burdensome wheat surplus has strengthened the Canadian wheat price from [illegible] per bushel to $1.25 plus what the participation certificates will finally bring the farmer. The manner in which the weekly press has advocated what was merely an idea in 1938 has resulted in all political parties and farmers' organizations solidly supporting chemurgy. The Government is now making a [illegible] available to expand research into industrial uses for farm crops and has plans for the creation of Western Laboratories of the National Research Council after the war. The power and influence of the weekly newspaper for good works is indeed great.



THE NEED GROWS AS VICTORY NEARS

$10,000,000 needed NOW!

This is the year of supreme effort, the year Red Cross will be needed as never before. And as our all-out victory drive gains momentum, as casualty lists mount, as the horrors of war spread wider and sink deeper, this need will grow.

We must see them through: the fighting men on every front, the gallant Merchant Navy, the wounded and maimed in British and Canadian hospitals, Prisoners of War, the homeless war orphans of Britain and the suffering millions of Europe.

Only the Red Cross meets this call for vital life saving food for Prisoners of War parcels, medicines, comforts, blood serum and nursing that spell survival for so many. There is no one else to do the job.

That is why we cannot fail: why we ask you to open your hearts and purses, giving to the limit of your ability.

Remember, Victory will not be cheap; the real need lies ahead.

CANADIAN RED CROSS

COMMUNICATION

The Executive of the Alberta Farmers' Union is giving consideration to many important questions which arose as a result of the Provincial Convention. They have issued the following statement with regard to their stand towards the co-operative movement:

"A rumor is being circulated through the Province that the Alberta Farmers' Union is opposed to co-operation. This is distinctly not the truth.

We are working for a bigger, fuller co-operative movement which will have greater chances of success against the forces which assail it, and the resolution passed by our Convention is intended as a means to this end.

True co-operators realise this, and the need for our resolution is proved by the representations made by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture which just recently requested the Federal Government to remove all obstacles to the function of co-operative organizations and thus make possible the greater development of the co-operative movement in Canada. This should be sufficient answer to those who are circulating the unjustifiable rumour that the Alberta Farmers' Union is opposed to true co-operation.

The following letter was also addressed to Mr. MacKinnon, Minister of Trade and Commerce:

A recent press report stated that an Export Committee will be set up by your Department for the handling of Canadian Exports and we would like to point out that the present internal freight rate structure will hamper the effective work of such a Committee so as to make it impossible to get the full benefits from the functioning of such a Committee.

Following the action of our recent Convention held in Edmonton at which 413 delegates representing 15,000 farmers were present the following resolution regarding freight rates was passed:

THAT WHEREAS Western Canadian Prairie Provinces and the Province of Alberta in particular have been subjected by authority of the Government of Canada to the imposition of crushing railway freights, outward as well as inward to all, whereby the trade, industry and agriculture of this province have been penalized and their success obstructed.

THEREFORE WE DEMAND the Dominion of Canada give relief in respect of Railway freights to Alberta, because Alberta public lands and minerals were in large part alienated for the purpose of main line construction. That such land and mineral alienation was paid for so far as land subsidies were concerned by the three prairie provinces out of nine. That in Alberta this transfer of Railway lands amounted to 13,120,000 acres.

In view of the close relationship of these matters we would be very interested to know what you propose to do about the internal freight rate question so that the Export Committee shall have a fair chance to do something effective.

Yours truly,
H. E. NICHOLS,
Secretary, Alberta Farmers' Union.

THE TOWN ELECTION—

THERE IS CAUSE for satisfaction that so many ratepayers turned out to vote on Monday. Tofield rarely has a town or school election, members more often than not being re-elected by acclamation. An election generally means that some interest is being taken in town and school affairs which providing it is unprejudiced and free of personal bias, is a good thing.

The issue on Monday (if there was a definite issue) seemed to centre around school affairs. There has arisen within the past year or so a demand on the part of the school board for sufficient money from the town council so that not only expenses of a current nature could be met, but a reserve fund accumulated so that some time in the future a new school could be built. As a general rule we rather like this idea. That is, for public bodies to have reserve funds so that when the need arises for capital expenditure there is some money on hand. Far too often have public bodies become faced with imperative demands for expenditure and have been forced to accept loans at whatever rates of interest were then prevailing. However there is a feature connected with the Tofield School District which needs clarifying. After having brought about the large school divisions by the merging of many small ones, the powers that be have invited many towns and villages to come into the divisional school set up. Some villages and towns have joined up with the large school divisions in which they were located and others for the time being have preferred to retain their separate identity. What will the Tofield School District do? The Mercury's present information is to the effect that the large division does not want it due to the Tofield District's indebtedness, and should it be taken in, it would only be so on the understanding that a special supplementary tax would be levied to take care of this indebtedness. This it is claimed would make school taxes in town and immediate vicinity, unduly high. Without going too deeply into this it could be pointed out that no matter whether levied by the Tofield Town on demand by the Tofield School District or whether levied by the enlarged M.D. on demand by the Holden School Division, taxes to cover the indebtedness have to be paid. The enlarged division separating the amount required to pay the indebtedness from the amount required for current expenditures does not necessarily mean taxes would be increased because of this alone.

What is required is some authoritative statement to the effect that the Tofield School District will not enter the large school division or that it is likely to do so. Either one would make a clear cut decision on the requisition question possible.

British Post-War Agriculture

The idea has been bruited abroad that never again will the British government permit its agriculture to decline. It has been said that once the war is ended, prices of British farm products will be maintained at levels that will encourage the production of food on substantial scale.

Many people deeply interested in agriculture have wondered if this was a correct prophecy of what would happen in the United Kingdom, particularly in view of the fact that Britain is 93 per cent industrial and 7 per cent agricultural. Now Mr. Hudson, minister of agriculture in the British cabinet, intimates that what the future holds for agriculture in that country is little different from certain views that have been expressed. Said Mr. Hudson: "The gap between our prices and the prices received by overseas farmers is wider today than it was prewar. Our prices are necessarily high. We could not avoid that because we had to call into existence marginal production to meet the demand but it would be folly on our part to ignore that disparity. If after the war there were too wide a gap between our prices and the prices of imported food, any government in power, any parliament elected by the public as a whole, however genuine they were in their desire to see a permanent, prosperous, healthy agriculture established in this country would, in the circumstances in which we are likely to be faced after the war be unable to afford to bridge the gap." — Alberta Wheat Pool.

Food Industry's War Savings Stamp Drive

At the end of the second week of the Food Industry's War Savings Stamp Drive, Alberta was second only to Nova Scotia in percentage of the quota of two million dollars for the Dominion.

The third week's results show sales of $9,236 for North Alberta, making a total of $15,702 for the first three weeks of the campaign, against their quota of 40,000 for the month with several accounts still outstanding.

With seven full days yet to go it is anticipated that North Alberta will far exceed their quota in this all important endeavour.

CITIZENS VOLUNTEER BUREAU

Following up the Food Industry's introduction of the "25 Club" and "Book of the Year" approximately 600 women of this bureau have been conducting a systematic house to house canvass to obtain individual pledges for continuation of stamp purchases throughout the year. This canvass is not yet complete, however Mrs. Ray Skurman reports that the success of the drive is assured and results should far surpass expectations.

LONDON: In a laboratory outside London, British scientists have discovered a way to double the size of fruit and vegetables, and of flowers, and to increase their quality and their ability to resist disease. The means they have used is the colchicine drug, and the method is described as giving an "anaesthetic shock" to the seed. This doubles the number of life germs (or chromosomes) in each seed which has the effect of making a bigger plant of finer quality.

A WEEKLY EDITOR LOOKS AT Ottawa

Written specially for the weekly newspapers of Canada

By JIM GREENBLAT

They must have been expecting excitement or something around the tag end of the Throne Speech because the galleries circling the House have been filled continuously. It looked to me as if the big majority of ringsiders were from out of town. Attendants have had to stop people more than usual from leaning their elbows on the gallery rail, which apparently is against traditional regulations. It also shows that folks there were not leaning back and snoozing. Parliament has really been steaming up for the start of the session and it looks as if it's going to be one of accomplishment. The Prime Minister seems to be pleased that it's "business before pleasure" because in one statement he urged members to broadcast to the nation that Parliament is really "doing something" instead of belittling its efforts in the eyes of the people.

Seen around the Capitol: Centre of interest in the fine new Post Office here is the new-fangled Mail-O-Mat, a machine which saves you from headaches at the wicket trying to figure out how many twos and threes you want. All you do is stick the required amount for stamps in a slot in something which has all the ear marks of a gum-vending machine, turn a gadget and away goes your letter mailed and everything. It's the first of its kind in Canada, although manufactured in Stamford, Connecticut. The Post Office Department is trying it out on the public here and it may be some day we'll have one in every P.O. so the postmaster will be able to go hunting and curling when he wants to. After I tried it once I wanted to write everyone in the country a letter just so I could mail it in the Mail-O-Mat.

Anyone who feels inclined to do a little harmonized grousing on reasons for rationing and controlled distribution will be surely interested in the figures I got from the Consumer Branch of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board in connection with parcels sent to our prisoners-of-war in enemy countries. The Red Cross western packing centre has, for instance, already despatched its millionth parcel to Canadian boys in Germany and Japan. Do you ever wonder what goes into one of these parcels? Well they've already sent out a million pounds of butter; a million pounds of jam; half a million cans of salmon and half a million pounds of sugar. Besides this, thousands of pounds of tea and coffee, biscuits and other rationed goods. All parcels they tell me, have included chocolate bars, raisins, tinned meats and soap. This all tells Canadian at-homes that there is a reason for some shortages and rationed distribution.

If you ever come to Ottawa to see Parliament and all the big stuff in action, make it a point to be in the main corridor of the building just a few minutes before 3 p.m. to watch the Speaker's parade. It's one of the few wartime restricted manifestations of traditional ceremony still to be seen. On the dot, slowly up the corridor come three uniformed attendants, then the big glittering Mace, behind that the dignified Speaker in his robes and a couple of the clerks trailing. The little procession wends its way to the House of Commons chamber. You'll have to uncover, to watch, or else.

Women are keeping the home fires burning, sure, but they're also playing a big part in the industrial picture. In December 1940, one woman in each 186 in Canada was in industry. Last December (1943) the ration had gone to one in 24.

Out in the smaller places everyone seems to have enough coffee to satisfy, but the other day in a restaurant in Ottawa at 7:30 p.m. I was told by the waitress "No more coffee. We've used up our quota for the day." If you could see the crowds pouring out of offices at meal times you'd wonder how they ever had enough coffee till noon.

Incorporation of Cost of Living Bonus into Wage Rates

THE ATTENTION of all employers in Canada, subject to the Wartime Wages Control Order 1943 (P.C. 9384), is directed to the provisions of the Order requiring them to establish for each of their occupational classifications, not above the rank of foreman, a single wage rate or range of wage rates as prescribed by the rules set out in Schedule "A" of the Order by adding to the previous authorized single wage rate or previous authorized range of wage rates the amount of previous authorized cost of living bonus, and that such established single wage rate or range of wage rates shall be effective for the first payroll period beginning on or after February 15, 1944.

Employers who may not be paying previous authorized cost of living bonus as required by General Orders of the National War Labour Board, issued under dates of August 4, 1942, and November 5, 1943, pursuant to the provisions of the Wartime Wages Control Order, P.C. 5963, are required to include such amounts of cost of living bonus in the establishment of wage rates of their employees under P.C. 9384 effective for the first payroll period beginning on or after February 15, 1944, as stated.

TO KEEP UP YOUR INSURANCE

It is just as important in war-time as in peace-time that you keep up your life insurance, but it may be harder to do so. We make loans also to help pay taxes, to provide for education, to pay doctors' bills, hospital charges and other emergency expenses, or to take advantage of business opportunities.

derstood before just the right treatment could be handed out. For instance it was possible for the district to put a man off a farm only to be liable for relief. The ratepayer making the enquiry was assured that council would look into these cases.

A ratepayer called attention to the fact that while the money balances showed some thirty odd thousand dollars in the chartered banks, they also showed only about five thousand dollars in the Treasury branches. He thought the difference was too great and that there was discrimination.

Answering this Reeve Ovens said most of the money was deposited with the Bank of Montreal because Council thought it to be to the best interests of the ratepayers as a whole. Considerable sums were saved in exchange for the ratepayers due to there being branches of the Bank of Montreal at Viking, Camrose, Vegreville and other points within the M.D. where municipal cheques were accepted at par.

It was moved by Mr. Finseth and seconded by Mr. Christofferson: "that it is the wish of this meeting that at least half of the money collected by the municipality be deposited in the Treasury Branch. The motion was lost.

A motion was made and seconded asking the council to give closer attention to land rentals. This motion was carried.

A question was asked regarding Victory Bonds, whether bonds were bought by divisions or by the M.D. as a whole. Reeve Ovens stated that Victory Bonds were bought by the M.D. as a whole. However this year he had been unable to spend all of his road appropriation and had purchased bonds to the value of $2000.00 with some of this money. The auditor had not distinguished between the $8000.00 worth of bonds the M.D. as a whole bought and the $2000.00 worth of bonds Div. one bought.

Mr. Forss of the Viking Hospital Board gave a brief report of the doings of the hospital for the year. The returning officer then called for nominations and the following were nominated:

Division One: Nels Forss; Henry Ovens.

Division Five J. Swabey, elected by acclamation.

Division Seven: Alfred Lefsrud, John Giebelhaus.

The election will be by divisions and will be held on Saturday, February 26th, 1944.

U.F.W.A. NOTES

Mrs. J. W. Morton entertained the U.F.W.A. for the February meeting which had been postponed for one week owing to our brief cold spell.

Mrs. J. Appleby reported on the very successful bridge and whist party for which she kindly lent her home.

A crib quilt, pieced by the members, had been put together and quilted by Mrs. Haukedahl was turned in and was voted to the local I.O.D.E. war work.

Mrs. I. C. Olson's report on the annual convention held in Calgary during January was very interesting and informative, and gave some idea of the wide range of the activities of our organization.

We are pleased to report the appointment of Mrs. A. Torrie as director for the Vegreville constituency.

We are confident the choice is a wise one and feel that Tofield has been honored.

U.F.W.A. meetings are held on the 2nd Thursday of each month and all farm women are invited to attend. Other visitors are also welcome.

BAPTIST CHURCH NEWS

Rev. and Mrs. Peterson are away on a holiday but the service will be carried on at the usual time, Sunday February 27th.

Sunday school at 10:30 a.m.
Morning worship at 11:30 a.m.

Mr. R. J. Rogers will deliver the morning message. All are cordially invited to attend.

Mrs. Currie spent a few days visiting at Trochu this week.

Mrs. A. Beirnes returned from the coast last week where she spent an enjoyable holiday.

LAKESHORE

Mr. and Mrs. John Warner Jr. spent a few days in Edmonton last week.

A number of people have been bitten by a flu germ lately and been more or less on the sick list. Perhaps our winter is too mild! Both Vernon Bethel and Billy Maciborski were quite ill and Dr. MacPherson was called to attend them.

R. C. Phillips returned from the coast to Edmonton about two weeks ago and is staying with his sister, Mrs. Latam. He went to Vancouver last fall hoping to benefit by a rest at the coast but his health had shown no improvement while there. He feels somewhat better now so we hope our good Alberta sunshine will prove to be just what he needs and that he can come back to the farm feeling fit as a fiddle for spring work.

Mrs. Bill Seale entertained three tables at bridge and dinner last Saturday. Prize winners were Mrs. V. Moss and Mrs. A. W. Holmes.

On Monday evening friends and neighbors of Mrs. Bethel surprised her on the occasion of her 75th birthday and stayed to play bridge and visit with this energetic youngster of our district. Sharing honors with Mrs. Bethel was Elmer Googlein whose birthday falls on the same day. They shared honours at bridge too—by an unusual coincidence, Mrs. Bethel won ladies' first and Mr. Googlein men's first prize. Consolation prizes were carried off by Mrs. Abernethy and Mr. Murray. After lunch had been served, the birthday candles blown out and the cakes eaten, Mr. Murray on behalf of those gathered there presented Mrs. Bethel with a gift conveying the good wishes of her Lakeshore and Mackenzie friends and their hopes that they would be privileged to gather on many more birthdays with her, to celebrate many more happy years.

Once more we wish to correct a mistake we made in our last column. Mrs. Francis does not plan to come home until the first part of March. Maybe our item was a case of wishful thinking—Mrs. Francis is one of those good neighbors that we like to have around. Ontario is too far away.

Miss Ardis Wood left on Monday for Ryley where she will be in charge of Dr. McPherson's office while he attends the 1944 session of the legislature.

TO ALL INTERESTED ELECTORS OF THE TOWN OF TOFIELD

Dear Electors:

Through the medium of the Tofield Mercury I wish to thank the nominators and all electors who considered me a suitable candidate as a trustee in the recent Tofield School Election.

I must confess the nomination came entirely as a surprise to me, more especially as it is many years since a lady was nominated and elected trustee. However in fairness to all concerned I allowed my name to stand and wish to cordially thank the electors for the honor and confidence they had in me as the unsolicited votes verify. I really do thank you one and all for your much appreciated trust in me as a citizen who has the welfare of the children, teachers and school at heart.

Having been connected with education all my life as a teacher in the Old Land and with eight years experience in Alberta and being connected with the interests of children over a long period in connection with School Fairs and other organizations, I feel in a position to understand their needs and welfare. As long as I am privileged to live, the Advancement of Education including Character Building, will be of growing interest to me.

Knowledge and experience gained educationally over a life-long period should prove a help and one can be just as interested in the education of other people's children as one's own.

Although not elected I again take this opportunity of thanking all who supported me and trust those who were elected will receive the support of the community.

Yours truly,
ISABEL ROBINSON, (Mrs. J.W.)

Miss Marcel Chalifoux of Edmonton is visiting with her sister, Mrs. Blake Clutterham.

Mrs. A. Lampitt, nee Helen Cookson, from Bentley, has been helping out at her parent's home while they were both ill. She expects to return to her home this week end.

Tofield Community League

The first supper meeting of the Tofield Community League was held in the Dining Room of the Royal Alexandra Hotel on Monday evening, February 21st. Twenty-three members exercised their appetites. After dinner there was a short sing song led by Abe Clutterham at the piano.

Mr. Abe Clutterham gave a short address on the Future of Youth in our Community and specified the part that could be played by the Community League in this the re-establishment of youth in our Community.

On a suggestion from the Chairman the Secretary-Treasurer was instructed to write the Students' Unions of the High School and Public School inviting them to select members, one from each Union, who would represent them on the Executive of the Tofield Community League.

A committee was appointed by the Chairman to investigate the possibility of Ladies becoming members of this League or if they would rather form an Auxiliary to the League.

The next general meeting of the League will take place on March 8th, in the Town Hall at 8 p.m. A full report of the Minstrel Show will be given at this meeting and will also be published in the paper.

TOFIELD BONSPIEL UNDER WAY

Wednesday saw the commencement of Tofield's Annual Bonspiel which bids fair to be up to the high standard set in other years. In addition to the local rinks there are rinks from Edmonton, Holden and Ryley. The weather is ideal, cold enough to make ice, yet not too cold for comfort while curling.

The usual competitions will be in evidence, Grand Challenge, etc. and there is a fine array of prizes for the winners.

It is too early yet to give results but winners and the prizes they won will be announced next week.

SHOWER

On Tuesday afternoon of this week the many friends of Mrs. J. Whyte, nee Mary Burnett, gathered in the curling rink to shower her with lovely gifts and good wishes for the future. After a social time was spent by the guests, the small son of Mrs. D. W. Warner drew in a wagon upon which stood a gaily decorated box in blue and white, filled with gifts for the recent bride. Mrs. Lampitt, an old school mate of the bride's, helped her to undo the parcels. Mrs. Whyte thanked all her friends very nicely and said it was lovely to be remembered even tho' she had been away from Tofield for the past year. A lovely lunch was served and each guest was treated with a piece of wedding cake.

Edmonton Hospital Advisory Committee with regard to new contract for hospitalization of residents of the Town, and explaining that the contract which would be effective from March 1, 1944, for one year would apply to all patients admitted. This therefore, means that any residents of the Town should make certain that they are given credit at the rate of 50c per day on any hospital accounts, to be deducted therefrom. Council would appreciate knowing of any instances where such credit is not allowed for after March 1, 1944. On motion of Councillors Francis-Scott the necessary by-law was given its third reading and finally passed. Contract applies to all four hospitals in Edmonton.

Standard Gravel and Surfacing Co. Ltd., Calgary, advising that Asphalt paving materials are no longer restricted and setting out qualification for construction of modern types of paving, gravelling, grading, etc. Letter was tabled for present.

The Canadian Red Cross Society, Tofield, asking appreciation of their work by way of a donation at this time. The letter was tabled until another meeting.

On motion of Councillors Bellamy-Francis, Councillor Clutterham was appointed Deputy Mayor for three months.

On motion of Councillors Bellamy-Clutterham, committees were appointed as follows:

Finance: Councillors Beirnes, Scott

Property and Rink: Councillors Clutterham, Francis

Police and Bylaws: Councillors Patterson, Beirnes.

Fire and Light: Councillors Francis, Patterson.

Health and Relief: Councillors Scott, Bellamy.

Public Works: Bellamy, Clutterham

Accounts for payment were authorized on motion of Councillors Beirnes and Francis.

Statement of Receipts and Expenditures for January was examined and ordered incorporated in the minutes on motion of Councillors Francis, Bellamy.

Finance Committee spent some time again considering the relation of mill rates to assessments but no definite decision was made. This question arises from the fact that mill rates do not produce sufficient taxes to provide school requisition, a considerable sum being provided by taxes on improvements, and an endeavor is being made to adjust this situation.

Meeting adjourned.

WHO LIKES PIE?

Apple, Pumpkin, Lemon or any of your favorites will be served at the Lakeshore War Workers Club Dance, Bridge Drive and Pie Social on Friday, March 10th. There should be a grand crowd for what better attraction could there be than a green apple pie with a shiny crust or a lemon pie with billowy light meringue. And they tell us Lakeshore girls know their pies too. Friday, March 10th at McKenzie Hall is pie time.

W.O. Jas. Bigland, a former high school student here, who has been a pilot instructor for the past two years, was recently posted overseas.

Red Cross Been to Prisoner of War

From the repatriated come stories of privation and hunger, misery and want in the prison camps of the enemy.

Flight Lieut. A. Malloch, RAAF of New South Wales, spent more than a year in an Italian prison camp. He was captured by a German motor lorry unit when he parachuted from his burning reconnaissance plane after it had been attacked by German fighters over the Libyan desert.

Two of his crew were killed and the third sent to prison camp in Germany. Malloch still carries the scars of his battle wounds.

This is what he has to say about Red Cross: "One has to be a prisoner to realize just what the Society does. It is something staggering. When you are hungry, it feeds you. When you are sick, it cares for you. When you are ill-clad, it clothes you, and when you are bored it sends you books to read . . ."

Malloch's statement continues: "If you have never been hungry it is hard to realize what a Red Cross food parcel means. Hunger gets so bad it keeps you awake at night, wondering if you ought to eat the few scraps of bread you have managed to save and hide away as a reserve.

"Many of us can say that we owe our existence to the Red Cross Society. We shall always be grateful to those people who have devoted so much of their time and money to our welfare."

There are many men like Malloch who wait for the brown pasteboard packets of food that go out from the five packing bureaus in Canada. Seven million such food parcels have been shipped since the beginning of this war. It is not enough. They must continue to go out to feed our men until this war is ended. Remember that, when you give to swell the $10,000,000 Canadian Red Cross fund this March!

Farmers are reminded that wheat can be taken as a donation to the Red Cross. Take your donation of wheat to the elevator and ask the elevator agent to make out the ticket to the Red Cross. It will not affect your quota.

LAKESHORE

Mrs. Frank Baumgartner and children who recently came from the coast spent some time last month with Mrs. Baumgartner's parents Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Jones. About two weeks ago they left for their farm in the Ministik district where they will make their home.

R. C. Phillips motored home from Edmonton last week and brought with him Mrs. Latan and Ken Brathe who visited at Eaton's and Phillip's.

The Leslie Jones family, also T. A. Jones, went to Clover Bar last Tuesday for the family birthday get-together. Mr. Jones sr. was 80 years old and also celebrating birthdays on the same date were Mrs. Leslie Jones and Glen.

Hugh Faulkner, range rider at the east side of the reserve, left on Monday for the Irma district where he will farm with his brother.

Last Thursday the War Workers' Club held its regular meeting at Mrs. Olsen's. A large amount of work was turned in—we think it would be an inspiration to some townfolk to see what these farm women accomplish. With none of the electrical appliances, nor the convenience of gas, and with numerous outdoor chores to do in addition to running the house (and remember these women bake their own bread, make butter, can meat, render lard and do endless other tasks that urban dwellers never even think about) they still can find or make time to do their war work. Mrs. Jacobson deserves special mention. She brought to the meeting two quilts, not only had she pieced the tops but she had filled, tied and bound them all ready to donate to the Red Cross and Salvation Army. What's more she had sewn sock tops together to make a woolen filling for the one. There have been three turtle neck sweaters knit by club members since the January meeting and turned in to the I.O.D.E. There were numerous other articles [illegible] divided between the Red Cross and I.O.D.E. With Mrs. T. A. Jones at one end of the district and Mrs. Maciborski at the other, each with a fine big flock of February chicks, Lakeshore people shouldn't have any trouble locating a "fry" for Easter or May 24th.

C. P. R. TREASURER

J. A. DUNDAS, assistant to the vice-president of finance of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company Montreal since 1932, was on February 11 named treasurer of the company by D. C. Coleman, the chairman and president. The new treasurer has been 37 years with the C.P.R.'s finance department and has served under all four of the company's financial vice-presidents the late I. G. Ogden, John Leslie, E. E. Lloyd and L. B. Unwin who is in charge of finance now. He is an authority on foreign exchange and in the fields of company finance and investment.

PREPARE FOR SEEDING EARLY

Preparation for seeding includes buying the seed, cleaning, treating it for disease, and putting the planting machinery in shape to do the necessary work without a hitch.

Perhaps the immediate necessity for care and early attention to these suggestions is more urgent this year than ever before. Machinery is aging and becoming more liable to breakdowns, spare parts are not always easily obtained and following last year's unfavourable season, good seed is scarce.

Good seed has certain essential characteristics. The most important of these are good germinating power and growing ability, often summed up in the term viability, freedom from weeds and other crops, and purity and suitability of variety.

Good germination and freedom from impurities are assured when seed is purchased by grade, and purity of variety when registered seed is used.

If the seed is home grown or obtained from a neighbour, a germination test should be made. This can be done at home or a sample can be sent to the nearest seed laboratory for an official analysis.

Clean seed is very important. Weeds are prevalent enough already, so that every effort should be made to prevent the introduction of new ones. The market value of grain is lowered when seeds of other crop plants are found in it.

Suitability of variety is essential. Only varieties that are suited to local conditions should be used. For instance in a district having a short season, the use of anything but an early maturing variety spells failure from the start, or again in a district where rust is common, the use of a resistant variety is imperative.

All seed should be treated for disease. Treatment with the new improved mercuric compounds can be carried out considerably ahead of seed time. This saves time when the rush of Spring work commences.

All these operations should be done as soon as possible to avoid delay and disappointment when it is seeding time in the Spring.

WORLD OF WHEAT

By H.G.L. Strange

PLANNED PRICES OR THE OPEN MARKET?

Suggestions are being made that after the war Britain should buy her needs of Canadian wheat at a set contract price. The trouble is that Britain will probably take no more than one third of the wheat Canadian farmers will have to sell if they are to stay in business.

What would happen to the other two thirds that normally is sold to one hundred different countries? All the evidence of the past seems to indicate that it would be quite impossible to make similar contracts that would be kept with all these many countries, so that it seems quite certain the bulk of our wheat would still have to be sold on the world's open markets. If the British contract prices were lower than the open market, our farmers would be dissatisfied, and if the British contract prices were higher than such open market prices, then British buyers would [illegible]

It does seem, then, as though the sale of our wheat on world open markets will be the only way to ensure the sale of all we can produce. There is not the slightest reason to believe, however, that the prices returned by this method would not be satisfactory, for if we have reasonably free international trade, there certainly would be no surpluses to depress price and it is only burdensome surpluses that have ever depressed price.

CUT LICENSE FEES ON OLD MOTOR CARS

Despite the strong appeal made by the Alberta Motor Association for a general reduction of motor license fees in this province, the provincial government has turned it down.

Instead there will be an extension of the period of the reduction of rates applying on old cars. Instead of these rates applying only on models up to and including 1929, the lower rates now will apply to models up to and including 1934.

Through the reduction on the old rates, it is estimated that some 13000 more car owners will benefit.

R. A. Godson of Edmonton, president of the A.M.A. has expressed strong criticism of the government's decision in refusing to grant a reduction to more than 80,000 owners of the newer and safer models of cars, comprising those made since 1934. He says this action is most unfair to these car owners.

The A.M.A. president pointed out that the old type of car is a menace to traffic and that 75 per cent of the accidents on Alberta roads involve these old cars.

He says that evidently the government intends to continue the policy of "gouging" the owners of newer type cars in obtaining funds for general revenue purposes.

An effort is being made by the A.M.A. to have its case for a general reduction of car license fees in Alberta put before the agricultural committee of the legislature so that the arguments in favor of such a course can be placed directly before the members of the whole house.

LONDON: More than 500 Nazi planes have been shot down by Polish flying forces on English soil in 1940. Poland's air strength in Britain now numbers 12,000 men. In all, Polish airmen have accounted for upwards of 1,500 Nazi planes since the start of the war.

The publication is announced by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics of the 1944 edition of the Official Handbook "Canada."

Canada 1944 covers the present situation in the Dominion from Atlantic to Pacific, the weight of emphasis being placed on those aspects that are currently of most importance. So far as space permits, all phases of the country's economic organization are dealt with and statistics are brought up to the latest possible date. The text is accompanied by a wealth of illustrative matter that adds to the interest of the subjects treated.

The Introduction reviews Canada's war program, covering the growth and activities of her Armed Forces, the financial steps that have been taken and the governmental organizations that have been created with their principal activities. It also reviews Canada's economic condition at the close of 1943. This Introduction is followed by a special article dealing with the Effects of the War on Canadian Forestry. This article describes the extent of the country's forest resources, the present rate of depletion and how our forest products have aided the cause of the United Nations.

The chapter material reviews in detail economic conditions under the various headings listed on the following pages. All sections of the Handbook are well illustrated by up-to-date half-tone reproductions.

The price of the publication is 25 cents per copy, which charge covers merely the cost of paper and actual press work. The special price concession granted, in the past, to teachers, bonafide students and ministers of religion has been discontinued in view of the necessity for diverting as large a proportion as possible of Dominion funds to the War, and to the fact that so far as possible, the sales policy of Government publications should be self-sustaining as regards printing materials used.

Application for copies should be made to the King's Printer, Ottawa, and not to the Dominion Statistician.

Postage stamps are not acceptable and applications must be accompanied by a postal note or by a coin enclosed between two squares of thin cardboard gummed together at the edges.

Selling Price Of Wheat

Canadian wheat is being sold in the markets of the world for prices up towards $1.50. This statement was made in the house of commons by Hon. J. G. Gardiner, minister of agriculture. He was replying to the charge that the government had stopped a rise in the price of wheat by fixing it at the $1.25 level.

Said Mr. Gardiner, "My honorable friend leaves the impression that a price of $1.25 a bushel has been established for wheat and that this price cannot go up. No such thing has been done. What this government did last September was to place a floor under the price of wheat for two years until July 31st, 1945 on wheat taken in after September 28th, 1943. We guaranteed that for every bushel of wheat delivered to the elevators we would pay on the basis of $1.25 No. 1 Northern, Fort William; and then what do we say with regard to that wheat. We say that this wheat, differing from the wheat which is to go under mutual aid or to countries which we are giving relief, is to be sold for what it will bring. I am not in the position at the moment to state what the price is but I submit that this wheat is being sold at considerably more than the floor price which has been referred to . . . wheat is being taken in by the government on a guaranteed floor of $1.25 a bushel and is being sold in the markets of the world for prices up towards $1.50. Every farmer who delivers a bushel of wheat under this program is given a participation certificate which entitles him to the earnings of the wheat which is being delivered to the markets of the world at the present time or which will be delivered in future."

Oft repeated by authorities, again an urgent appeal is sent out to the highways and byways of Canada that Halifax is terribly overcrowded; that dependents etc., of service personnel try to "stay put" where they are.

STALIN'S CHALLENGE

Long before the war, Moscow had developed a vast TVA-like program for the Volga, Europe's greatest river. But progress was interrupted when the Germans attacked in 1941.

In Moscow today men are quietly turning back to their drawing boards, making fresh computations, finishing uncompleted estimates or altering others.

No one says much about the Volga scheme yet because there is so much still to be done before the war is won and life revived along the western frontier. But no Russian soldier has a thought of postwar unemployment when he knows that 12 huge dams remain to be built in this gigantic, unfinished project—one of which will alone provide almost double the hydroelectric capacity of Grand Coulee.

While the bogey of at least temporary unemployment haunts both London and Washington, Moscow is quietly exploring the possibilities of "human reparations" — of seeking from enemies who destroyed her cities a priority on the output of skilled workmen, some of whom would produce heavy machinery to replace what they had destroyed and others who would help provide the Russians with the consumers goods which they have been forced to forego for so long.

Even more boldly is the talk of seeking to bring to Russia the skilled workers themselves to take over some of the jobs that might have been done by the 6,000,000 people the Soviet Union has lost.

GERMAN WAR BREAD

German war bread is 30 per cent rye flour and the balance is beech or pinewood sawdust, according to Paul Ghali, newspaper correspondent in Berne, Switzerland. The bread is still sold at prewar prices and is always fresh. The main auxiliary food to bread is a mess of pottage consisting of potatoes and mangelwurzels cooked in water. To fight breakdowns due to inadequate nourishment, vitamin tablets and calcium are being given to factory hands.

COUNCILLORS RETURNED—

THE RESULT OF THE M.D. election for councillors was quite decisive and it is therefore permissible to say now what we were tempted to say before the election, namely that for this one year it would have been better to have returned the former councillors by acclamation. The Municipal set up being brand new, it seemed to us that the three councillors whose terms expired had hardly got their bearings before their time was up. Naturally in the course of events councillors come and go and it would be very unwise to say anything that would suggest the regular election procedure should not be taken advantage of. But with a new large municipal set up it seemed the one year was hardly a long enough time for councillors to really accomplish much. However, all's well that ends well, and the three councillors having been re-elected, have three years in which to do their best before the returning officer asks them to toe the line once more.

POST WAR PLANNING—

IT IS SURPRISING how much post war planning is being done. Hardly a day passes but some piece of literature reaches us explaining the views of this or that individual, and within the past few days we have received "Facts in the Case" by Gilbert Jackson; "Living is Our Business" by Edward Highe; and "Foundations of National Well Being" by John L. McDougal. All these are books well out of the pamphlet class and will take considerable time to read. How pleasant or profitable they may be we cannot now say, but the interesting feature is that so many people are writing and so much literature is being printed concerning a post war period the advent of which even the bravest would hesitate to date.

No doubt all this interest in a post war period is all to the good and by studying things out in advance, many mistakes and much grief can be avoided. Yet we cannot help remarking that we are still in the war period and our efforts and energies should be directed towards winning the war because unless we do win it post war planning is not going to do us much good. We also feel that in the post war period, whenever it may arrive, good government and individual happiness will be brought closer together if there are fewer peaks and valleys of economic well being. A government that can organize, develop and distribute the human and natural wealth of a country so that all its citizens receive something, is likely to be a popular one.

WHAT GOES UP MUST COME DOWN

(CONTRIBUTED)

WHATEVER GOES UP . . . must come down . . . that's sure as shootin' . . . Remember the last war? . . . Well here is how things went . . . wheat up to $3.25 a bushel in 1918 . . . it sold in the early 30's as low as 27c . . . not enough to pay for binder twine and feed for the horses.

Men coming back from overseas got it the worst of anyone, and some of them never recovered; the wounds that peace gave them were a hundred times more fatal than bullets and shells . . . They soaked them $140.00 for a common everyday cow . . . which sold a couple of years later at $23.00 a piece. Day-old grade calves cost $15.00 . . . two years later these same calves grown big and fat, sold for around $18.00 on the hoof.

Hay was $25.00 a ton, then dropped to $3.75 and after 1920 ruin and bankruptcy were commonplace in every section in Canada, and returned soldiers — starved off the land — were selling lead pencils . . . candy and soap from door to door . . . and dying on their feet from sheer discouragement and poverty, their children forced to quit school at 15 and 16 years of age to take hard, underpaid jobs, to keep the rest of the family from starvation.

That's what Canada is going to see doesn't happen again, but unless everyone keeps battling, it will come sure as guns.

How to prevent it . . . well, here's your part in this nation-wide fight . . . watch prices . . . observe ration regulations . . . buy only what you really need . . . for if inflation ever gets its ugly beak into us we'll go through all the hard times again . . . only they'll be harder this time . . . for there are more people to suffer . . . more prices to tumble. There's more to lose.

We're riding high right now—big pay rolls . . . good wages . . . more jobs than people to fill them . . . but the pay-off is just around the next corner . . . What are you doing to see that inflation doesn't get a headstart? What are you doing to hold the price ceiling line?

SEED CLEANING

In cleaning seed grain, the number of weed seeds coming out under the fanning mill is of little importance compared with the weed seeds that are left in the finished product, says L. B. Goodall, Dominion Seed Branch.

There would appear to be little excuse for small weed seeds being left in seed of the cereal grains after they have been cleaned, but seed drill surveys conducted in this and other provinces have shown that astounding numbers of small weed seeds are being sown annually with cereal grains. Because of the apparent ease with which such seed cleaning should be accomplished many operators of fanning mills fail to check properly the results they are getting.

The small weed seeds in cereals have a habit of settling down out of sight and seed that may appear to be perfectly clean when viewed in bulk may yet contain an astonishing number of small weed seeds. A check on the results being obtained should be made periodically by spreading out a sample of the cleaned seed on a sheet of paper, or other flat light coloured surface, and sorting it over carefully. Care must be exercised to see that the seed is spread thinly enough so that all impurities may be observed.

A WEEKLY EDITOR LOOKS AT Ottawa

Written specially for the weekly newspapers of Canada

By JIM GREENBLAT

Throughout the length and breadth of the nation there are few who haven't some relative, man or woman, somewhere in the armed forces, and it's only natural that everyone is concerned with their future when the guns stop booming. Certainly they've got to stand on their own feet to a great extent to preserve their own self respect and independance, but in view of their services to our country the State has some responsibility for their rehabilitation. That got me thinking that right here in Ottawa, of course, is the answer to problems which have been maybe bothering people.

I had heard of the Canadian Veterans Rehabilitation Plan, but didn't know much about it. Figured most other people wouldn't either, so I struck off to see E. B. Reid, superintendent of publicity for the Department of Pensions and National Health and got from him a clear picture of just what is being planned for the men and women returning to civil life. What you think of it is your own business. What I propose to do is lay the facts before you for easy comprehension.

The whole very important Plan had to be a blueprint first, but some of it is at work already. Apparently they tackled the problem with the keynote idea that the "job" is the vital thing and the answer to the job is "skill". You know, of course, that the men and women have been guaranteed a return to their civilian jobs, if they exist, and if they were bona fide employees of the company before enlisting and with seniority rights established. But what about the thousands and thousands of others not fortunate enough to have a peace-time niche to step back into? That's the highlight of the plan as I saw it.

To ensure that thing called financial security during the transition period the Post Discharge Re-Establishment Order provides cash allowances of $10.20 weekly to the single person, $14.40 to the married and if necessary additional allowances for children on the same scale as when the person was in service. There are five groups eligible, Mr. Reid told me: 1. Those fit and available for work and who have no suitable employment available. 2. Those under Vocational Training (also provided under government auspices). 3. Those in small business or on farms and awaiting returns. 4. After discharge, those temporarily unable to work. 5. Those finishing university education which was interrupted by the war, (and provision for this is also in the plan).

Before getting into the meat of the thing, let me add that these allowances, except in out-of-work benefits can be applied for within 12 months after discharge or the end of the war. The out-of-work ones are paid only within 18 months after discharge.

The vocational training phase of the plan seems to me to hit the jackpot. There are no strings attached to the offer in this war, so there's no use starting to think "they didn't do this or that" in the last one. Any service man or woman, the plan definitely states, is entitled to vocational training on the basis of period of service, if he will benefit by it, for a minimum of 12 months. Fields of employment are now being vigorously explored and plans, I am told, are laid by which they expect more than 50 per cent of those discharged from the services will go into industry to be trained in various fields. There will be sympathetic "guiding" and that, to me, seems another highlight of the plans laid to restore our men and women returning from the war.

It might be well to add, lest anyone think the Plan is just in the "mind" yet that phases of the program are operating already with more than 6,000 having benefitted and some 2000 getting training. Last reports indicate that in connection with those whose university education had been interrupted by enlistment, some 75 are back and continuing their courses through auspices of the Plan.

Now let's get down to earth. That means to the land, where most people in Canada directly or indirectly are rooted. Thousands of those returning will have no other thought in mind than to be independent farmers; others, primary producers or fishermen, as their dads were before them. What about them, I asked Mr. Reid. The answer lay in the Veterans Land Act, and again you might be inclined to get suspicious in view of past experiences, but don't—until you get the full picture.

There are three types of settlement embodied in the Act; first, full time farming for those with practical farming experience; secondly, assistance for small holdings for veterans in spots easily accessible to the place where work, and this includes of course, industrial jobs; thirdly, small holdings near fishing areas where the veterans expect to take on the job of being a commercial fisherman.

The Plan is finicky about one thing and rightly so, that those going into the assisted settlement scheme must be suited to it and not burdened with an overwhelming debt. There was bitter experience after the last war by reason of this very thing not being made fundamental to plan of resettlement, if you will remember.

Here in a nutshell is the Veterans Land Act. The State is prepared to finance the purchase of land and buildings up to $4800 and in addition livestock and equipment up to $1200, a total of $6000. What does the applicant have to do? He must on application deposit cash to the extent of 10 per cent of the total cost of land and buildings, which is a maximum of $480. And here's the swell part of the deal for him or her. If they fulfil terms of the agreement for ten years, the state resells them the whole thing, lock, stock and barrel, at two thirds of the cost plus the 10 per cent down payment; this means $3680. The rest is a gift from the State which also agree to finance the balance ($3200) over a maximum period of 25 years with interest at three and a half per cent. The veteran in the deal becomes owner of everything such as livestock, farm implements, fishing equipment, etc., as well. A simple thesis, this.

Another thing, the veteran is allowed to select his farm or small holding himself but he must show that in making the selection it will make for a reasonable opportunity to establish himself, or might I add, herself, too. That is, they wouldn't want a prospective wheat farmer to settle in a pile of sand. There has been many a sad experience in this line which they want to avoid.

This is merely a glimpse of the Plan and of course full details will be provided the individual at the proper time.

I also wanted a brief picture of another side of the problem of rehabilitation and got it. Regulations provide for pensioners free treatment and allowances as a "permanent right." As to non-pensioners. Any ex-service man or woman may get free treatment if it commences within a year of discharge and allowances can be paid for 12 months or the period of service, whichever is the lesser during the first eighteen months after discharge.

The whole Plan seemed to me one designed particularly as a "mutual aid" sort of thing. The men or women returning from war service have a direct responsibility to help themselves but deserve and are to get a helping hand from those whom they served, the people, and the people are the state. There are volunteer committees all over Canada working closely with the government on this business of rehabilitation. The government is also seeking co-operation of industry and employers throughout the nation, because the transition period is one on which the future of Canada may well depend.

Just a sidelight. When the lads and lassies get their discharge, they are allowed one month's service pay and allowances; a clothing allowance of $65 and railway fare to home or place of enlistment, as desired.

A BIG JOB

Dr. W. E. Peterson of the University of Minnesota addressed the Saskatchewan Dairy Convention held a short time ago. He said that milking is the largest labor job in American agriculture requiring 750,000 people working 8 hours a day and 365 days a year. —— The Budget

FARM CASH INCOME AT NEW HIGH LEVEL

According to official estimates, the cash income of Canadian farmers reached a new high level in 1943 when the estimated returns from the sale of farm products totalled $1,397 million. This represents an increase of $282 million or 25 per cent over 1942, and is up $671 million, or 93 per cent, over 1939. Higher income is reported from all provinces and with few exceptions the increase is common to all the various sources of income.

The greatest percentage increases occurred in the Prairie Provinces where despite a reduced harvest sales from the previous year's crop were substantial. The returns from live stock were also substantially greater in the Prairie Provinces particularly in Saskatchewan and Alberta. Poor crops in the Eastern Provinces resulted in a reduction in cash income from the sale of grains in these provinces but the decrease was offset by greater income from the sale of live stock and live stock products.

FIGHTS GRAIN INSECTS DURING TRANSPORT

The safeguarding of grain and cereal products from insect attack has been one of the main concerns since the outbreak of war. Investigations on stored grain [illegible] have been an important part of the work of the Division of Entomology and Plant Protection, Science Service, Dominion Department of Agriculture. The work was carried on with the co-operation of the Board of Grain Commissioners and the grain companies [illegible] with regard to the prevention of infestation by insects during the transport of grain. All cars of grain hauled from country points where infestation is known to occur are routed to the terminals and upon arrival the grain is cleaned, and if necessary fumigated. The cars used in transporting the grain are cleaned with compressed air at the terminal elevator to prevent insects which may still be in the cars from infesting subsequent loads.

Motorists!
Apply NOW for your New Gasoline Licenses and Ration Coupon Books

On March 31, the present gasoline licenses and ration coupon books will expire. After that date no gasoline will be sold except on the presentation of a 1944-45 ration book.

In his own interests, every vehicle owner is asked to apply at once for a new license and ration coupon book for each of his vehicles. Application forms must be completed in detail.

Commencing April 1, under the 1944-45 rationing plan, the operation of which will be basically the same as that now in effect, all non-commercial vehicle owners will again be allowed a basic "AA" gasoline license and ration coupon book, containing 40 units for a passenger car, or 16 for a motorcycle.

Similarly, owners of vehicles eligible for a "Special" category, who can prove their need, will be granted an extra vocational allowance, fixed in advance for the year ending March 31, 1945. In determining the extra allowance — which will be measured to individual needs — the previous category and mileage of the car will not necessarily be an important consideration.

The extra vocational coupons will again be issued in books labelled "Special", and each book will contain not more than 60 units. To permit constant review of the needs of each category applicant, only one "Special" book, or portion thereof, will be issued at a time. The Oil Controller also has the right to refuse any application for a "Special" category, or to suspend any ration coupon book for an infraction of the regulations.

The shortage of gasoline is still acute. Do not apply for a "Special" category unless your need is urgent.

Gasoline for commercial vehicles will again be rationed. To assure themselves sufficient gasoline to carry on normal business activities after March 31, operators of commercial vehicles are urged to complete at once and in detail the required application for each of their vehicles.

On and after April 1, service station attendants will not accept gasoline ration coupons unless the license plate number of the motor vehicle for which they were issued is written in ink on each coupon. Every motor vehicle must also display on its windshield a 1944-45 sticker indicating the category of the coupon book submitted at the time of the purchase.

If the owner of a motor vehicle sells, transfers or disposes of it in any way, it is his obligation to see that the gasoline license and ration coupon book for that vehicle is returned immediately to the nearest Regional Oil Control Office.

To obtain a gasoline license and ration coupon book, secure an application form at your nearest Post Office. Study the form and follow carefully the instructions contained therein.

When you receive your 1944-45 gasoline ration book, guard it carefully. Do not leave it in your car. If, because of your negligence, it is lost or stolen, it may not be replaced.

Holden Wiltshire Bacon Show Draws Record Crowd

The Holden Wiltshire Bacon Show drew a record crowd of 271 farmers to see the local products exhibited

Peter Wiley, Swine Promoter for the Department, stated that building equipment for housing hogs is inferior as compared with equipment for other live stock He thought there should be a definite improvement in this respect.

The exhibits of the Wiltshire sides was high-lighted by cutting an A 1 carcass placed first in the show and that placed last It happened that both carcasses were from the same litter and the same owner This showed the effect of over finishing The rashers from an over fed hog contained about twice the area of fat compared with a rasher from an A-1 carcass

Mr N Curtis, Senior Field Man of the Dominion Live Stock Branch gave a talk on Advanced Registry Programmes He stated that producers must know feed consumption required by litters from the various dams. If a pig from one litter requires 3 28 lbs. of feed to put on 1 lb of gain and another required 4 28 lbs of feed to put on 1 lb of gain, this difference in feed consumption means one ton of feed for a litter of ten hogs to put on the same gain.

It happened that one of the carcasses cut up had an excellent loin and marbling of lean meat He pointed out that this was the type of hog that should be raised for Wiltshire side as compared with another carcass, which had a large amount of fat in comparison to lean

Advanced Registry Programmes furnish information to the farmer who makes use of it.

DAIRY OR BEEF CATTLE

(Experimental Farms News)

It pays to give careful consideration to both market and farm conditions before deciding upon a cattle policy or the kind to keep

Near large cities or in countries where there is a dense population and land is expensive, the dairy cow is the most profitable A retail market for whole milk is a favored plan where available, and the sale of cream usually ranks second, or sometimes the sale of whole milk in bulk However, due to the perishable nature of the product the dairy farm cannot be too far from the market. The nearer to the market the greater is the degree of specialization with the dairy cow serving as a living factory, converting rough feed and chop into milk.

The commercial beef herd is at home in districts far removed from centres of population and even far from railways where dairying would be impractical Where land is low in price and not suitable for intensive farming, beef cattle may be produced at a low cost Between the intensive farm near the city and the area far removed from railways there are many variations in conditions where the individual set up should determine the kind of cattle to keep

Many farmers within reasonable distance from markets prefer a cow which will give a reasonable quantity of milk and a beef carcass quite comparable to straight beef animals. From a small beginning in 1921 an effort has been made at the Dominion Experimental Station at Scott, Sask., states E. Van Nice to develop a herd of Shorthorn cattle carrying a reasonable balance of beef and milk A good measure of success has been attained but such a program presents a problem not common to either beef or dairy breeds in that two objects are sought These were that beef and milk should be maintained at a proper balance for if one is given too much preference the other suffers

Some object to the name Dual Purpose, others object to "Milking Shorthorns" and perhaps the name Shorthorn is sufficient for this breed However, the fact remains that all Shorthorns in Canada are registered in the same herd book and while there are other good breeds used for both beef and milk the Shorthorns are by far the most popular They are well adapted to the middle course which fits admirably into many farm programmes in Canada

USED TUBES

Used collapsible tubes will no longer have to be turned in when shaving cream or tooth paste is purchased. Because the amount of tin used in newly-manufactured tubes has been reduced, the percentage of tin recovered from salvage has dropped to less than 15 per cent of the gross weight of the tubes, and accordingly the compulsory feature has been rescinded.

ARMY NOTES

By Sgt. DENNY LAYZELL

Calgary, Alta., February 28—Many years ago old Chief Ermine Horses of the Blood Indians concluded an address to his people with the words "Mokokit-Ki-Atsakimat"

Today, many decades later, "Mokokit-Ki Atsakimat", which in the language of the White Man means "Be Wise and Persevere" stands as the motto of the oldest Army Cadet Corps in the province of Alberta, that of St Paul's Residential School on the vast Blood Indian Reserve

Neither in the colorful language of this tribe of the Blackfoot confederacy nor in the writings of their White Brothers has the growth of this long-lived corps been recorded but the memory of at least one man is steeped with the history of this organization which has sent its sons into battle for the Allies in two wars He is Major The Rev Archdeacon Samuel H. Middleton, R.D., principal of the Anglican residential school on the Reserve, better known to his faithful parishioners as Ninaistako or Chief Mountain.

POUNDER LOOKS BACK

Recently, seated in his comfortable study, the walls of which are studded with pictures of the Bloods in tribal regalia and in the khaki of the Canadian Army, Archdeacon Middleton looked back over the years—back over more than three decades—to the day he started the St Paul Residential School Cadets

In his own words he was a "green Englishman" who had come to the west to act as a teacher to the Indians From the start he was with the Bloods and one of his first ideas was to form a Boy Scout troop

This was done but it was not long before the young Englishman realized that his pupils knew much more of scouting, trekking and woodcraft than their teacher would ever know

"I dropped it cold", the Archdeacon recalled, "because it is never wise for the pupils to know more than the teacher They needed something, however, because the Indians' code is different to that of the white man. They needed discipline and I found that cadet training was the answer We have had a corps ever since that day, some 32 years ago

Several years later war came and it was a member of the corps, Albert Mountain Horse, who was the first Indian in western Canada to enlist and the seventeenth man to be attested at Calgary.

A brilliant member of his race he soon earned his commission but in 1915 he was wounded in France. He died in Quebec on route to his home and was buried with full military honors on the Reserve on November 27, 1915

SIX FORMER CADETS IN ACTION

Two of his brothers, Mike and Joe Mountain Horse enlisted the next day and before war ended a total of six of the former St Paul's cadets had seen action with the Canadian forces.

Conclusion of hostilities in 1918 did not bring a halt in the activities of the St Paul Corps Instead it tended to increase its activities

Outbreak of a Second World War saw a ready response from former St Paul cadets to the call to the colors Today nine members of the tribe who trained with the cadets are overseas They are Stephen and Bert Mistaken Chief, George Strangling Wolf Andy Standing Alone, Johnny and Horace Quesnelle, William Wadsworth, Billy Creighton and Billy Oka. Two others recently returned from England are Frederick Weasel Fat and Edward Brave Rock while others are serving with the forces in Canada.

The young Indians receive valuable training in the St Paul Cadet Corps for the majority spend some seven years as members of the unit They come to school at seven years of age, start cadet training at 10, officially become members of the corps at 12 and leave it when they leave school at 17

Then, too, until war intervened they had a brass band but their bandmaster, A C Henson of Cardston, enlisted and the band is dormant until another bandmaster can be located in that part of the country.

Despite these handicaps the young Indians are willing to learn and that is why the corps has built up an enviable reputation in first aid and other subjects on the cadet curricula.

Never, as long as cadet camps have been held in Alberta, have the Blood Indians been absent

Scours In Small Pigs

(Experimental Farms News)

Common scours, an ailment of suckling pigs gives hog producers considerable trouble and may cause heavy losses in small pigs unless precautions are taken to prevent it. This ailment is most likely to affect winter and early spring-farrowed litters closely confined in dark, damp and chilly buildings, says H Wilson, Dominion Experimental Farm, Lacombe, Alberta When nursing pigs become chilled an attack of scours is likely to result In some instances the udder of the sow becomes affected with mastitis or garget, resulting in milk being secreted that is unhealthy for pigs It usually causes fatal scouring Infection from germs which are commonly associated with filth is also responsible for digestive disturbances resulting in diarrhoea and other troubles.

However, over-feeding or sudden changes in the food of the sow are probably the most important causes of pig scours At the first sign of scours the sow's feed should be reduced one-half at least, and if she is receiving barley it should immediately be removed from her ration A light thin slop of shorts and lime-water makes the most satisfactory diet for the sow until the little pigs are better It may be necessary to keep the sow on restricted rations for three or four days Lime-water can be conveniently made by putting a half pound of quicklime into a pail of clean water, stirring it thoroughly while slaking is in progress and then allowing the lime to settle

Removal of irritating substances from the bowels should be by the use of castor oil Pigs that are less than one week old should be given a teaspoonful of castor oil, and those over a week old one tablespoon If the diarrhoea persists, small quantities of lime-water may be used to advantage A tablespoon administered to each little pig daily should be sufficient to alleviate the inflammation in the intestines

The best treatment will be of little value unless the pigs are immediately removed to clean, dry quarters.

If swine dysentry has become established in a herd, the pigs showing signs of sickness should be placed at once in another pen separate from the healthy ones. When any of the healthy group sicken, they should be removed.

Fungicides on the Farm

Fungicides for the control of plant diseases and for general disinfection are used on all farms. Some of the best fungicides are the most poisonous and troublesome to handle. A careless person might have some difficulty in using either mercury dusts or formalin.

Mercury fungicides such as ceresan, leytosan, and lunasa, widely used for treating grain, are excellent fungicides and should not give trouble if handled as recommended. Avoid inhaling the dusts; work in a well ventilated building or outside, and wear a mask. If [illegible] are not available, tie a clean handkerchief over the nose and mouth. Suitable masks are not expensive. After handling poisonous dusts or solutions, wash up thoroughly, especially before eating. Avoid an excess of fungicide on the hands, face or clothing. Left-over dusted grain should not be fed to livestock; it may be sown for green feed.

Formalin, an irritating and deadly poison, has been used for years by most farmers without serious trouble. They know it and handle it with the care and caution it deserves. It is a good fungicide and general disinfectant. Formalin treated grain may be fed to livestock after thorough airing. Farmers have used bluestone and lysol as general disinfectants without serious trouble although they are poisonous. Sulphur is a good common fungicide. It is nonpoisonous except when burned for fumigation purposes; then the fumes are both irritating and toxic.

Before using any fungicide, read carefully the directions printed on the container. Note the warnings on bones and skull, if any, and read the "antidote." If an accident occurs, call a doctor without delay.

Keep all poisonous material out of reach of children. Fungicides, insecticides, gopher and rat poisons should be kept together in a box or cabinet under lock and key. Clean up and put away all utensils used for fungicide mixtures or treatment.

Always use the best fungicides. The basic rules are simple. [illegible] them; apply the treatment and apply common sense—Do not be careless.—Contributed by Dr. P. M. Simmonds and Dr. H. W. Mead, Dominion Laboratory of Plant Pathology, Saskatoon.

McKENZIE

Hockey has been one of the main attractions here lately. Our local team motored to Kingman two weeks ago but lost by quite a large margin. However last Saturday the Kingman team visited us making a very interesting game by winning with a score of 3-2.

Last Sunday our team's skill was organized against the Lindbrook group, and we won with a neat score (sorry the exact score is unknown). You're improving boys, keep up the good work!

Incidentally, another game is planned with Lindbrook next Sunday at our local rink.

Last Sunday a number from here including Mr. and Mrs. Gouglein and Bonnie; Mr. and Mrs. V. Moss and Mr. Olsen, motored to Viking to inspect some cattle.

The young people gathered at the school last Friday night to spend an evening of games and fun. The party was sponsored by the teacher and students of the Senior room.

At our last calf club meeting Mr. Andrews was present to give an interesting travelogue of his tours through Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime Provinces. His subject dealt mainly with Hereford Associations.

Miss Pengs spent last week end at the Gouhault home.

'THE TOFIELD MERCURY
Vol. XXIII., No. 46 Thursday, March 9, 1944 $2.00 Per Year. To U.S.A. $2.50

PROVINCIAL LIBRARY ALBERTA

SPECIAL NOTICE

For quite a long time and from several sources the Mercury has been receiving announcements of forthcoming country social events Partly from generosity and partly because it was easier than writing a letter, we have inserted them without charge regardless whether they were chargeable or not.

The rule regarding chargeable and unchargeable announcements in connection with public gatherings is easy to understand If there is an admission price or if the event is held for the raising of funds the announcement is chargeable. If there is no admission charge and the event is not held for the raising of funds the Mercury is quite willing to assist the gathering by making an announcement of it.

Locals announcing events held for fund raising purposes cost 15c per count line and for small events five to seven lines is sufficient. If those sending in chargeable items would kindly remember this, it would save us the embarrassment of omitting the items.

At this time we would like to thank the U.F.W.A. for their kindness in "insisting" that the publication of their yearly program be paid for.

Plasma Saves Lives

This war is writing an epic in the world's medical history Thousands of lives of wounded men have been saved already by the prompt use of dried blood serum, administered at the scene of battle

"Plasma is almost as necessary as food and has become routine in the treatment of battle casualties," the head of a front-line hospital states

Wounded soldiers who get their "second chance" from blood donated back home in Red Cross Clinics by Canadians who care, sometimes ask for a blood serum can for a souvenir Just to show that it was from the "folks back home" that his new lease on life came

Because of the absolute necessity of this precious serum, it is transported up to the front lines and administered right in the shadow of gun fire Doctors have had bottles of plasma shot from their hands. Some medical men have been wounded in the act of giving it.

The greatest value of plasma, according to the Army doctors, is the relieving of shock. Nearly every severely injured person passes into a state known as traumatic shock This is in many cases a merciful release from suffering, but it is also a sign that life is ebbing out

Blood transfusions as shock treatment are regarded as a major medical development of this age. Nearly half the wounded are now being returned to battle duty and many others are recovering.

"There is no substitute for blood plasma as we use it today", is the claim of major medical men dealing with the wounded on the battlefronts of the world.

"Blood serum has saved the lives of hundreds and thousands. It gives medicine and surgery chances they did not have in the last war"

"Tell the people at home to keep it coming in a never-ending supply", is the concerted plea of army doctors who bend their skill to the saving of lives.

The Canadian Red Cross is calling on all loyal Canadians to back up their fighting men by keeping dried blood serum available. The Campaign fund for $10,000,000 will help keep blood donor service going The return is measured in lives saved. Will you help the Canadian Red Cross to help save our fighting men?

LAKESHORE

Mr. and Mrs. John Jones and family arrived here from the coast this week and are staying with Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Jones. Johnny is going to help with the farm work this year.

There are two very happy families in this district we're sure. Mrs. J. Jones returned home from Edmonton where she has been for the past three months and Mrs. Francis arrived home from Ontario after a 10 weeks' stay there. The children have been doing a good job of helping their dads, but we bet both families feel like cheering now "Mom" is back.

Arnold Jones and Art Redway both entered the hospital this week to undergo operations

Walter Eaton, who has been posted to Macleod, had a leave this week that made it possible for him to spend Wednesday at home.

Don't forget the pie social, dance and Bridge at McKenzie on Friday, for the Red Cross. Bridge players will adjourn to the school for their game while the dancers have the hall. That way everyone can choose his sport and be happy—we hope. The girl with a pie gets in free—and remember girls there's more lure in a luscious pie than there is in a puff of Dream-Girl Powder, a whiff of Heaven-sent Perfume or a Sixty-Second-Soap-Your-Own Facial. Give your leap year chances a boost with a good juicy pie. Please mark the kind of pie you have on the outside wrapper.

It might be of interest to all of us especially while the Red Cross drive is on, to know that Frank Dunn mentioned the Red Cross parcels in his letters home. Evidently it was some time before he received any parcels from home but the Red Cross got theirs to him. So when you give your donation just think "There go a few parcels to Frank from me."

OATS IN POULTRY FEEDING

(Experimental Farms News)

The use of oats in poultry feeding has given, according to some recent experiments, good results either for young growing chicks or for mature birds. For the chicks the addition of oats to the ration promotes better growth and more rapid feathering. Whole oats added to the grain mixture would help to prevent cannibalism and feather picking among every bird of the poultry yard. When oats form a part of the ration, mortality is reduced and fewer cases of slipped tendon have been remarked. The proportion of oats to incorporate is 20 to 25 per cent for both grain and meal mixture, states H. L. Lessard, Dominion Experimental Station, Lennoxville, Que.

The utilization of oats in turkey feeding offers the same advantage as in poultry feeding.

Sprouted oats fed daily to laying hens is also a good practice to follow especially when little or no green feed is available. Besides helping to prevent cannibalism and feather picking as in the case of whole oats, sprouted oat supply certain beneficial digestive ferments. Sprouted oats can also be fed in small quantities to growing chicks at the age of three weeks or a month.

A warm place for the germination of oats in the winter is also necessary. Germination requires from 6 to 7 days and is done in a cotton or jute bag. Two or three pounds of oats will give enough sprouted grain for 100 hens. The first day the oats are soaked in water for 12 to 15 hours or overnight. On the second day the bag is taken out of the water and hung up on a hook. The third day they should be soaked again for 12 to 15 minutes. The water before each soaking should be changed. On the following days the same operations are repeated until the oats are ready to be used that is when the sprouts are an inch to an inch and a half long. After the third day and before each soaking the oats should be loosened up in order to avoid too much intermixing.

In order to have a daily supply of sprouted oats, one should put some to germinate every day or every two days according to the number of hens kept. The work will be much simplified if a special rack were built where there will be room enough to hang 5 or 6 bags. Not more than 10 pounds of whole oats should be used per bag because the grain when sprouting increases in weight and in volume.

Three pounds of good oats produce around 10 pounds of sprouted oats and one can feed from 5 to 10 lb. daily per 100 hens.

TO AN ELEVATOR

By Edna Jacques

What dim cathedral there against the sky
Rears its staunch head to watch the years go by,
Marking the hours as they gently pass
With long, slim fingers shadowed on the grass,
A faithful sentinel it stands alone,
Piercing the landscape like a shaft of stone.

No bells ring out to call the good to prayer
And yet a thousand songs are 'prisoned there;
Summer is whispering in the silent grain,
I hear against my heart the sound of rain,
The beat of wings above the sprouting wheat,
Old sloughs and summerfallow drenched in heat.

What precious treasure does this temple hold?
Great bins of wheat stored up like miser's gold,
Bread for a hungry world, the fruit of toil,
The blessed alchemy of sun and soil,
A golden heritage of wealth and power
Holding the skyline like a shining tower.

An Englishman and an American were crossing the ocean on a boat. While chatting on deck one day the Englishman inquired about the American's occupation.

"I'm a magician," was the confident answer.

"Really! If you please, sir, what is your specialty?"

"I make things disappear," replied the American smilingly.

Just at that instant a torpedo scored a direct hit and the two voyagers found themselves in the water clinging to the wreckage.

Shaking the water from his eyes, the Englishman spattered angrily, "I suppose you think that's funny!"

Canadian Junior Red Cross is again meeting a pressing need in prisoner of war camps. Some time ago it gave $25,000 worth of dental equipment for use in the camps, and has undertaken to repeat this gift, upon learning that the need is urgent.

Wounded in action 14 days after landing in Sicily, Lieut. Atkinson of Ridgetown, Ontario was given transfusions of blood serum in hospital in North Africa.

OTTAWA NEWS LETTER

Ottawa — Outstanding war contribution of Canadian farmers is emphasized by lifting of meat rationing because production reached such a peak that storage and transportation facilities are taxed to capacity. Last year Canada sent more than 675,000,000 pounds of bacon to Britain and Federal experts estimate that the Dominion this year could supply the United Kingdom with 1,000,000,000 pounds. Despite huge exports, big meat surpluses have piled up in the Dominion, due to the unprecedented production.

Rationing began May 27, 1943, to accumulate stocks for shipment to Britain and to ensure fair distribution throughout Canada of the balance left for domestic supply. Amounts of meat available now are beyond capacity of available shipping space, so meat is once again released for sale to the public without restriction. Farmers are again permitted to slaughter and sell direct to consumers anywhere.

It will at least be months before meat rationing is restored and it is quite possible that it may never be resorted to again. Federal authorities are negotiating for outlets for accumulated surpluses, chief of which might be shipment of beef to Britain, if this could be arranged. In the meantime increased buying by Canadian consumers is expected to reduce storage stocks and improve the demand throughout the Dominion. Hog marketings during the first eight weeks of 1944 were 80 per cent above the same period last year; cattle 50 per cent; calves 20 per cent and sheep and lambs 35 per cent. Suspension of rationing focused public attention on the splendid record of Canadian producers despite serious shortage of farm labor.

HEALTH INSURANCE

The new health insurance plan, designed to afford medical and hospital services to everyone in Canada and full dental care to all children under 16, shares the Ottawa spotlight. It is estimated the benefits will cost $250,000,000 besides administration costs, or an average of $22 for every man, woman and child in the Dominion. Of this, the Dominion would pay an estimated $100,000,000 while $150,000,000 would be contributed by the public under a graded system of payments.

Under the proposed National Health Act every person over 16 would have to pay a flat rate of $12 a year, if able to do so. In addition, single persons would pay three per cent of income over $660 but no such payment to exceed $30; married persons would pay five per cent of income over $1,200, the maximum of such payment to be $60. A married man would also pay $12 a year for his wife and for all dependents over 16, but nothing additional for children under 16 who, however, would get all the benefits of the plan. Thus a single person earning $1,000 a year would pay a total of $22.20 and if earning $1400 a year, would pay $34.20. Single persons earning $1660 or more would pay the maximum of $42.

Married men earning $1500 a year would pay $39 annually; those earning $1800 would pay $54. At $2000, the annual fees would be $64 to cover all medical and hospital services for the family and at $2200 a year or more the fee would be the maximum of $74. Single persons earning less than $660 a year and married persons $1200 or less would pay only $12 a year.

Announcing the revised plan to the Social Security Committee of the House of Commons, Hon. Ian Mackenzie, Minister of Pensions and National Health, said it would "provide health insurance for everyone irrespective of income, thereby bringing adequate medical care within the reach of all."

IN THE PEACE RIVER BLOCK

W. D. Albright, superintendent of the Dominion government experimental station at Beaverlodge, Peace River, writes: "This winter has impressed upon many of us anew the importance of water supply. Creeks and lakes have almost dried up. Some springs and shallow wells have shrunk to a trickle. Even deep wells fail unless the groundwater is replenished by seepage at headwater sources. This is where forestry counts. We must absorb all the snow melt and rain water that we can on the higher ground, hold run-off as far up the slopes as possible and in some districts must excavate more and larger dugouts. In doing this co-operatively, our French Canadian settlers east of the Smoky river are showing the way. The P.F.R.A. has a job ahead of it in the Peace. ---Wheat Pool Budget.

In a speech, Navy Minister Angus Macdonald said that a hundred million tons of food, fuel and war supplies have been transported across the Atlantic since the war began by merchant seamen of Canada and other United Nations. Some achievement! These men are the salt of the earth, not only of the sea.

Some idea of the great cost of government is revealed in one seemingly insignificant item. Do you know that window cleaning in government buildings in Ottawa during 1943 cost $33,222.15. In 1939 it cost $16,160.05, which gives one some conception of the many new temporary buildings which have been necessary to the war economy.

The Need Grows as Victory Nears

BANKING IS ADAPTABLE

...it changes constantly to meet this country's changing needs

FOR INSTANCE...

Ever wonder where your ration coupons go? The answer is that your grocer takes your sugar, butter and other coupons to his bank, which acts as the government's agent in identifying and accounting for millions of spent coupons. This vast bookkeeping job—known as "Ration Coupon Banking"—is just one of the new, additional assignments which the banks have assumed as part of their wartime service.

Another is the payment, on behalf of the government, of certain subsidies arising out of wartime price control. Still another is the handling of exchange transactions as agents of the Foreign Exchange Control Board.

At the same time the banks have arranged facilities to serve military establishments and new war-industry centres alike.

Through loans to industry and agriculture, they have helped to increase the supply of raw materials, weapons and food.

They have acted as issuing agents for approximately $5,700,000,000 worth of Victory Bonds and War Savings Certificates, as well as lending direct financial aid to the government through short term loans.

...All this in the face of widespread staff changes resulting from enlistments of 8,360 trained bank employees.

The war emergency has proved the readiness and ability of Canada's banks to adapt their services to new conditions. It has proved, once again, the strength of your banking system, which is providing a firm base of financial service for the greatest economic effort in the nation's history, and will with equal resourcefulness meet the challenge of the years ahead.

THE NORTH ROAD—

IT WAS WELCOME NEWS that broke on Tuesday night when Hon. Floyd M. Baker telephoned Mr. Olson of McKenzie school that the north road from Tofield between the Cooking Lake and Vegreville highways would be gravelled and taken over by the government.

It will be remembered that for years past representation from different bodies have waited on the government for a request that this particular stretch of road be gravelled and it began to appear as if there was little prospect of the road being any more than an earth road for years to come. So when the good news did arrive it was doubly welcome. Residents on and near the road, residents of a large area south of Tofield who can now enjoy a Sunday at Elk Island Park without watching every cloud in the sky, truck drivers from a large area north who make trips to Tofield for coal, the Town of Tofield, and no doubt no less than anyone, the councillor for Division five will receive the news with pleasure.

POST WAR PLANNING—

WE HAVE ALREADY commented upon the quantity of literature being circulated regarding post war planning and remarked that all post war planning is dependent upon Canada being among the nations winning the war and that it is this problem which at the present time should concern all of us most.

Even so, out of three books received last week we started to read "Facts in the Case" (it was the prettiest cover) by Gilbert Jackson, who as the back of the book announces, is a well-known Canadian economist. It is hardly possible in a brief writing to fully cover the book, even if we felt with one reading we understood it all, but a brief reference to it will do no harm. Mr. Jackson skillfully takes the reader through the intricacies of the Canadian dollar, American dollar, British pound and goes on to comment upon the "Miracle of War Production," "Promises of Post War Bliss," and into the sixth chapter "World Market or Downfall."

In this chapter it is very definitely stated that Canada's income has most always been dependent upon the size of her exports and that a large export year would be followed by Canadian prosperity and an exceptionally small export year by adversity.

This it might be said, while not new reasoning, is not as generally understood as it should be. What is new is the approaching problems of re-establishing former world markets, and it is going to be no easy problem, but one the success or failure of which means good times or hard times for Canada. It is true there will be a hungry Europe and Asia, but they will be so hungry and so war ravished and destitute that export markets in the same sense as we looked upon pre-war markets simply won't exist for some time until after peace is declared. No doubt some form of international credits will be devised whereby the hungry will be fed, but for some time there will be no "exchange" of national wealth, simply a giving or lending one way.

We have been told by musicians that there are eight notes in an octave and with these eight notes in their different keys, divided or multiplied, the most complicated musical selections are played. Money is something like music. We all know there are 100 mills in a dollar and ten dimes in a dollar, but by the time bankers, brokers, treasury men, interest and commission men have divided and multiplied the original dollar, the result is something like a philharmonic symphony concert, a series of ups and downs, intricate and beautiful perhaps, but hard to understand, seemingly having no beginning or end.

But there is one thing Canadians and Americans, particularly Western Canadians and Americans can understand and that is progressive development of unsettled areas. There are plenty of men still living who walked to their homesteads situated miles from the nearest railroad. There are men and women who remember the covered wagon, the ox cart, the sod shack and the log hut. There are plenty of western people who can recall whole cities, railroads, terminals, power stations, bridge spans and who have before their eyes so to speak, seen an immense area transformed from virgin timber and prairie into a productive realm as rich as any in the world. And there are Eastern Canadian people who remember the prosperity dependent upon the development of the west; the rails made, locomotives built, dynamos, motors, machinery, houses, and furniture shipped. And with the reaching of the Rockies came the Last Great West.

But somehow or other Mother nature it would seem in conspiracy with the future, has a card up her sleeve. All the rails that will be needed have not been made, there are still locomotives to be built, box cars, passenger coaches, and all those things which the Canadian and American West needed in the development period, to be made for a new North West, whose climate similar to that of the middle United States, is temperate and whose soil simply awaits the "scratch" of the plow. In Northwest China there is a vast area that the Chinese government has for the past two years been busily engaged in preparing for development. Originally the cradle of Chinese civilization, this area, three times the size of Germany and France put together, passed into oblivion with the opening of treaty ports and ocean transportation. Twenty-two million people or about five per cent of China's population live there and judging from its location on the globe the climate would be similar to Nebraska and Kansas. A ten year development plan will include agriculture, mining, transportation, communication, water conservancy, education and public health. Irrigation projects will be numerous and among other things it is planned to drill ten thousand artesian wells in ten years.

All this development will need machinery, both industrial and agricultural. Having only so to speak, just recently emerged from a vast development of their own, The Last Great West, what countries in the world could better supply China with those things she so badly needs than Canada and the United States? Perhaps Canada's export market is not all shot after all.

The first part of this writing dealt with "Facts in the Case" by Gilbert Jackson. Here is a short final extract from it:

"The great paradox of World War II may be very simply stated. It is that when playing our civilian part in the safeguarding of our own liberties, when faced by the greatest peril that ever confronted free men, when supposedly straining every nerve to save what we hold most dear—we have actually been living better, than we lived in the halcyon days of 1929 .....

"But if this paradox holds—if as a nation we have actually lived better—so far—in the Twilight of the Gods, than we lived in our tranquil past—let us not deceive ourselves. Let us not suppose, while so much of mankind is on the rack, that we possess a special immunity. For our turn will come.

Because the difficulties ahead of us are so plainly to be seen, because the spurious solutions are so many, because we so greatly need mutual tolerance and a realistic attitude to fact, this pamphlet has been written."

TO PAY TAXES PROMPTLY

War-time taxes are necessarily so heavy as to be a financial problem for every Canadian. It is advisable to save money to pay taxes promptly, but if through unforeseen circumstances you find yourself without sufficient cash to meet them when due, a bank loan is probably the best solution to your problem. A loan may actually save money for you by enabling you to avoid penalties for overdue taxes.

Our policy in making personal loans is to help Canadian wage-and-salary-earners, professional men and women and business executives to keep financially fit. We therefore make such loans—at very low rates and on easy terms of payment. Do not hesitate to talk over your needs in confidence with the manager of our branch in your own locality.

YOUR MONEY MAKES THE WORK OF THE RED CROSS POSSIBLE

In Prison Camps—in Enemy Hospitals—in the dark hours of loneliness or suffering, the victims of war voice this cry—"Thank God for the Red Cross." On every front, the merciful operations of the Red Cross are at work. Millions of parcels have been safely sent to prisoners of war. YOUR money makes this possible. Good seed is scarce and may be even scarcer next year.

It would pay farmers to purchase now say six bushels of the best Registered seed, sow this on a few acres and so have at a cheap price a large quantity of good seed available for next year's use.

A. J. ANDERSON ELECTED REEVE

Over A Ton Of Forage Crop Seed Ordered

Laying down tentative plans by which the M.D. of Beaver Council hope to be of still further service to the ratepayers featured the first meeting in the 1944 municipal year.

The meeting was held at Ryley, Monday, March 13th, there being present: Councillors Anderson, Giebelhaus, Logan, Lucas, Moen, Ovens and Swabey.

The secretary, J. W. McMullen, called the meeting to order and the new members (re-elected) signed the customary oath of office.

Nominations for the office of reeve was then called for.

Councillor Giebelhaus moved that Councillor Ovens be reeve.

Councillor Swabey moved that Councillor Anderson be reeve.

Councillor Moen moved that nominations be closed.

The vote for reeve was by ballot and on counting the ballots there were four for Anderson and three for Ovens. Councillor Anderson was declared reeve and took the chair.

Councillor Ovens was the first to congratulate Reeve Anderson, warmly shaking his hand.

Reeve Anderson thanked the councillors for the honor bestowed upon him. He said Councillor Ovens had been a good reeve and did a good job. As a councillor he had given full co-operation and would like to receive the same. Receiving this he was sure the district would make progress.

Nominations for deputy reeve were called for.

Moved by Councillor Logan that Councillor Ovens be deputy reeve.

Moved by Councillor Moen that nominations close.

Councillor Ovens was declared deputy-reeve.

Councillor Ovens thanked council for the appointment and said he would co-operate with the reeve and council.

Reeve Anderson gave a brief report of the secretary's and his visit to the M.D. of Wainwright office as instructed at the last meeting. He said they had learned considerable and obtained some new ideas. Among other things he was impressed by the system of committees the M.D. of Wainwright had. The committees were as follows: Public Works (2); Finance (2); Public Welfare and Health (2); Agricultural (4); Property, reeve and staff. Each councillor is a committee of one for relief in his own division. The reeve is ex-officio member of all committees.

In explaining the Wainwright setup Reeve Anderson said that the public works committee there was working on a five year plan. They had no large machinery and former M.D.'s had pooled all resources. Considerable road work was done by contract. When budgeting a certain sum is allocated for public works and the committee does work first in one division and then another. Considerable discussion centred around the committee suggestion and this drifted into an attempt to define the duties of the finance committee. The method of handling of pay sheets by the committee proved a knotty problem and the committee idea was tabled for the immediate present.

Councillor Logan moved that an agricultural committee of three be appointed and that the District Agriculturist act as secretary and be a member of the committee. Carried.

Agricultural committee appointed were Reeve Anderson, Councillors Logan and Swabey.

On motion of Councillor Ovens the District Agriculturist will be asked to act as secretary and to become a member of the committee.

Councillor Logan moved that financial committee be set up today. Carried.

Adjournment for dinner.

Re-assembling, the minutes of the last regular meeting were read and adopted.

Taking up the appointment of a finance committee, discussion again centred around the difficulty the committee would have in handling pay sheets. Councillor Giebelhaus doubted the value of a finance committee as regards pay sheets as they could not know enough of work done outside of their own divisions.

On the motion of Councillor Giebelhaus it was decided to table the question of committees for today and go into the details of committee work at some later date.

Messrs. Snortheim and Sharrow interviewed council regarding the purchase of N.W. 16 and S.W. 21-48-17. Both men offered $[illegible] for both quarters and agreed to lease the land to the present occupant, Mr. Brathrude. Councillor Moen expressed himself as being opposed to forcing a man off his home place.

Mr. Brathrude was called in and Messrs. Snortheim and Sharrow retired. After hearing Mr. Brathrude's explanation, Mr. Brathrude retired and council considered the proposed sale from all angles. Council finally decided to lease the two quarters of land to Mr. Brathrude and not sell it.

Moved by Councillor Giebelhaus that we lease the land in question to Mr. Brathrude on yearly contract for 1944 and as long as Mr. Brathrude lives up to the agreement. The M.D. to get one third of the quota after the first five bushels. The agricultural committee to draw up lease. Carried.

During the discussion regarding the sale of the above land Councillor Ovens suggested that all good land held by the M.D. should be held for returned men.

Letter was read from LAC Hoover requesting tax exemption on N.E. 4-51-20. This was granted.

On the motion of Councillor Logan the secretary will have the title for all lands upon which tax exemptions is requested searched at the land titles office.

Mr. N. M. Solberg interviewed council. He wanted to know why he was not getting the Mercury. He said all those living in west half of Twp 49, Rg. 17 would like to receive it. Mr. Solberg was informed this would be attended to.

Letter from Canadian National Institute for the blind requesting a grant. It was decided to take up the matter of grants when taking up estimates.

Agreement from Viking Hospital was tabled so that all hospital agreements could be taken up at one time.

Letter from Director of Assessment saying the 1944 assessment would be the same as 1943.

Application for the position of auditor was received from Patriquin and Johnston. Their rates were $15 per seven hour day per man while in the service of the M.D.

On motion of Councillor Moen, Patriquin and Johnston were appointed auditors for 1944.

Letter from Beulah home requesting grant was tabled.

Mothers' Allowance, Old Age Pensions and hospital admissions were checked.

Letter from Bureau of Public welfare saying that M.D.'s should not try to collect any relief given during depression. The senior governments had relinquished all their claims.

On the motion of Councillor Lucas all relief grants were cancelled as to collection.

Letter from Mr. Larsen of Poe outlining his position. On the motion of Councillor Logan, relief was increased and some coal will be purchased for Mr. Larsen.

Requisitions from school and hospital districts were received and tabled until all were in.

Mr. B. Tokan complained regarding horses being tied to his fence. He would like the M.D. to put in hitching posts. Councillor Lucas was asked to attend to this.

Mr. Hamilton of Adams Machinery Co. interviewed council regarding purchase of motor grader. Factories were now only allowed to build three, no elevating graders. Three motor graders would be shipped to Edmonton at a cost of $9200 odd dollars. Council were of the opinion it would at some time be needing a motor grader, but at this time preferred to formulate a policy rather than take action.

Messrs. Campbell, Dr. Cutsungavich and Fleming of Holden interviewed council. Mr. Fleming who acted as chief spokesman, explained that they were representing the Holden Hospital Committee, a committee formed with the aim of forming a municipal hospital district around Holden and to erect a hospital there. Mr. Fleming explained that the proposed district would consist of nine townships of which seven would be in Beaver M.D. and two in Camrose M.D. The district would

TURKEY BREEDERS

It will not be long until the turkey hens commence laying. According to C W Traves, Poultry Commissioner, many farmers are making the mistake of not putting the turkey breeding females and turkey toms on a balanced breeding mash.

A breeding mash is necessary if early eggs are to be obtained and if these eggs are to be of good hatching quality. Those who intend to [illegible] from turkeys should see to it, if they have not already done so, that the breeders are placed on a recognized breeding formula. Since yolk colour does not enter into the question of turkey eggs, the flock can receive a considerable amount more green feed than can other [illegible] of poultry. Care should be taken to see that the turkeys do not receive an over supply of whole grain, especially whole wheat, so that they become over-fat. Good quality whole oats should be before breeding turkeys at all times.

LOOSE AND COVERED SMUTS OF GRAIN REQUIRE DIFFERENT TREATMENTS

Don't expect results from the use of Mercury Dusts for loose smuts. For covered smuts of grain the Mercury Dusts provide an excellent control and are highly recommended by the Field Crops Branch.

The covered smuts of cereals are surface borne and are easily controlled. These smuts are a type of fungus. They are, in reality, miniature plants that are carried from one season to the next by means of spores which adhere to the surface of seeds of our common grains. The covered smuts of wheat, oats and barley are the most important in this country and can be controlled by treatment of the seed with a Mercury Dust such as Ceresan or Leytosan.

Loose smuts, however, present a totally different problem. Loose smut cannot be controlled by the ordinary seed treatment because upon germination of the spores, the fungus grows inside the seeds. If these already infected kernels are threshed and saved for seed even if chemically treated, a smutted crop will be produced.

There is a hot water treatment that might be used for the control of loose smut, but because it is so difficult to carry out, few farmers ever try it. The safest and best way for the farmer to control loose smut, is to purchase a few bushels of registered seed for a field plot and replace the entire crop with seed from the plot as soon as possible.

Sandwiches Form Housewife's Lifesaver For Quickly Prepared Lunch

by LAURA C PEPPER

Chief, Consumer Section, Dominion Department of Agriculture

Sandwiches, besides being the mainstay of the carried lunch are the housewife's lifesaver on busy days for a quickly prepared lunch or [illegible]

Those who have to make sandwiches everyday realize that a considerable share of the weekly butter ration disappears this way. But butter, like so many other foods is amenable to stretching in various ways. The Consumer Section of the Dominion Department of Agriculture offers stretching exercises guaranteed to reduce the inroads made on the family ration. One of the most satisfactory stretchers is milk.

Cream half lb. butter until soft and fluffy and gradually cream in half cup milk, beating until all the milk is absorbed and adding a dash of salt. Mould and if not being used immediately, chill. This stretched butter is good for table use but should not be used for cooking.

Butter may also be creamed with salad dressing, chili sauce, prepared mustard, relish or horse-radish, according to the filling to be used. Not only will the butter go further but sandwiches will be more flavour-[illegible]

Even if eaten everyday, sandwiches need not become monotonous; appearance as well as flavour can be changed. Children love a sandwich made of one slice white and one slice brown bread or a crusty roll hollowed out, brushed inside with melted butter and filled.

Do spread fillings generously — right to the edge. There'll be fewer uneaten crusts. And don't have the fillings so moist that the sandwich becomes soggy before lunch time. Lettuce helps keep the bread from getting soggy, acting as a waterproof protection against moist fill-[illegible]

Here are a few suggestions for fillings, some old and some new:

Sliced hardcooked egg and pickled beet with salad dressing.

Chopped egg, a pinch of curry and a bit of crushed bay leaf, salad dressing.

Chopped egg, grated raw carrot and salad dressing.

Chopped egg, ground liver and salad dressing.

Cottage or cream cheese with chives, relish, pickles, grated turnip or carrot, green peppers, jam or jelly.

Potato salad and sliced cooked meat.

Raw vegetable salad slightly moistened with salad dressing.

Baked beans, mashed with chili sauce or salad dressing.

Grated raw carrots, ground raw raisins and honey.

A filling that may be made ahead and will keep for several days in a cold place is a time-saving convenience; here is a good filling of this type:

Cheese and Egg Spread

1 tablespoon mild-flavored fat
1 teaspoon grated onion (optional)
1½ tablespoons flour
2 tablespoons sugar
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon mustard
¾ cup milk
1 tablespoon vinegar
1 cup grated cheese
4 hard cooked eggs, chopped

Melt fat and cook onion in it for 1 minute. Add flour, sugar, salt and mustard and stir until well blended; add milk. Cook, stirring constantly until mixture thickens. Add vinegar and cheese and continue cooking until cheese melts and mixture is smooth. Add eggs and cool. Store in a covered jar in a cool place. Makes 2¼ cups filling.

IMPROVED BREAD

The popular notion that bread should be white resulted in flour millers striving to produce the whitest possible flour. To do so, certain coatings were removed from the wheat kernel and were used principally as feed for livestock. In comparatively recent years it was discovered that the parts which were removed in the flour milling processes contained vitamins of what is known as the B complex. The most important among these vitamins is B1 or thiamin. About five-sixths of the vitamin content originally present in wheat was being removed by the milling processes.

Vitamins are a fairly recent discovery. Their importance in the human diet cannot be expanded upon here. However, scientists state that many diseases of the human body are caused by lack of vitamins and, consequently, they are important in human food to maintain the health of the people. Vitamin B1 in particular provides the human body with strength, energy and resistance to disease. Deprived of this vitamin a person becomes afflicted with despondency, lassitude, lack of ambition and energy.

Early in the war years the British government, on the advice of eminent physicians, made it compulsory for millers to reinforce British bread with synthetic vitamin B1. In Canada, after lengthy experiments conducted by scientists and flour millers, a method was devised for retaining most of the vitamins. The government established two grades of flour and two of bread with most of the natural vitamin content of the wheat retained therein. These [illegible] were Canada Approved White Flour and Canada Approved Flour, and Canada Approved White Bread and Canada Approved Bread. It is not compulsory to purchase this bread, but every Canadian family should do so in order to maintain health.

Dr. F. F. Tisdall, chairman of the committee on nutrition of the Canadian Medical Association, said, "We feel there is no one dietary measure that can improve the health of the nation more than improving the nutritional value of Canada's flour . . . It is of tremendous national importance." —Wheat Pool Budget

EDMONTON JEWS ARE PROUD OF JEWS IN SERVICES

An Honour Roll in tribute to the 165 Jewish men and women from Edmonton who have enlisted in active service was recently unveiled in the Talmud Torah Hall on 123rd St. at a ceremony over which H. A. Friedman, K C, presided. Rabbi Abraham Postone and Flt Lt. Jacob Eisen, RCAF chaplain were present at the ceremonies. Flt. Lt. Eisen praised the contribution of the Edmonton Jewish community to the armed services, and that he had seen [illegible] and women from Edmonton in every part of the Dominion, in Labrador, New[illegible] and the Aleutians. Some of them were serving in Africa [illegible] in Italy.

PROPER COOKING SAVES VITAMINS

Conservation of food means conservation of food values too and the methods of cooking recommended today take that into account.

Vegetables cooked covered, in very little water until barely tender not only taste better but are better. Nutrition Services at Ottawa give figures which prove this. As compared with vegetables drowned and cooked beyond the point where they are just tender, modern methods retain twice as much iron and vitamin C and six times as much of the B vitamins. Similarly greater proportions of other health-protective elements are also retained.

RATION BOOK NUMBER 4

Ration Book 4 will be distributed during the last week of March from over 1000 centres in Alberta organized by the 53 Local Ration Boards in the province, officials of the regional ration administration in Ed[illegible]

The final week in March is Ration Book Week all across Canada, but each community will select dates during that week for local distribution of the new ration book. It is advisable to watch weekly newspaper advertisements for these dates and the centres of distribution.

Formalities, now familiar in obtaining new ration books are: Print name, address, prefix letters and serial number, and age if under 16 on the red application card at the back of ration book 3. Do not detach this card but present ration book 3, intact, at the distribution centre in order to obtain ration book 4.

New feature of importance in this campaign is the deadline for application. Late applicants for ration book 4 will not be able to obtain one until April 17th.

Registry of the municipality number is required for this issue. This number can be obtained from any municipality official, from a municipal map or from the local post office.

Do not destroy ration book 3 which contains 10, "F" coupons for canning sugar, not valid until later in the season. It is possible that meat rationing will be resumed, for which meat coupons in ration book 3 may be required.

Winnipeg, March 13—On Friday, March 3, Capt. R. M. Smith, Trans-Canada Air Lines pilot, established a new record for a non-stop westbound flight from Great Britain to Montreal. The record flight was made by a big four-engined Lancaster transport operated by TCA in the Canadian Government Trans-Atlantic Service. The elapsed time from take off in Scotland to landing in Montreal was 12 hours and 59 minutes, bettering by 17 minutes, the record established a week before by Capt. A. Rankin. The plane carried 3,611 pounds of army mail and 435 pounds of freight as well as four official passengers.

AT THE FRONT

When listeners hear the voice of Matthew Halton, Marcel Ouimet, or any of the other CBC correspondents reporting from the battle area, it's because the Unit's engineers have plenty of pluck and steady nerves for without the engineers the front-line broadcast would not be possible. Here is Lloyd Moore, member of the engineering staff in Montreal, now on duty overseas.

NATIONAL LOCOMOTIVES NEED BIG COAL PILE

Toronto, February 28— The large fleet of locomotives hauling urgent war traffic over Canadian National Railways lines during the past twelve month period used seven-and-a-half million tons of coal to raise steam for that purpose. This is practically double the amount of coal required in a normal pre-war traffic year. A 5400 engine burns approximately three tons of coal during eight hours of service, while a 6200 type locomotive needed for heavy main line work in National System service consumes nine tons during a three-hour run.

IMPROVING TECHNIQUE—

AS A DIRECT RESULT of the motion passed at the February meeting of the Council of M.D. of Beaver, officials of the M.D. of Beaver visited the office of M.D. of Wainwright for the purpose of finding out at first hand how things were run there. Wainwright M.D. has the distinction of being among the first enlarged Municipal Districts to be organized. The M.D. of Beaver officials found that while many things were similar as regards both municipalities, there were a number of things which were different. For instance, Wainwright M.D. has considerable roadwork done by private contractors, the M.D. of Beaver so far, has had none. The M.D. of Wainwright possesses no large road building machinery, M.D. of Beaver has two outfits. But perhaps the most important idea or suggestion brought back from Wainwright, was the information that M.D. of Wainwright work by committees. The committees are: public works, finance, public welfare and health, agricultural and property. The idea seemed to take hold with the M.D. of Beaver council and it is more than likely that some committees will be formed there soon. As a start an agricultural committee was formed on Monday.

Thinking along the line of working by committees, it has occurred to us that a committee to pass on matters of policy might be worth while. Quite often a communication will be read to council or a delegation received by council whose wish it is that council pass a resolution giving official sanction to something the writers of the communication or the delegation desire. Sometimes from the view point of the council these requests mean little and a resolution can be and is quickly passed. At other times there are various and important interests involved and a resolution of endorsement should only be passed after the matter had received full and careful consideration either by the whole council or by a committee representing council.

A rural council meeting is just one piece of business after another. Some quite important, some relatively unimportant, it is scarcely ever dull. From the consideration of a simple tax problem concerning one ratepayer, councillors immediately mentally jump to the consideration of a machinery purchase involving thousands of dollars, and this goes on all day. With the coming of the enlarged districts the business coming before council meetings have multiplied and a rural council is an important legislative body, and one whose resolutions should and do carry much weight.

A PIONEER—

PRIOR TO THE BEGINNING of 1943 only a few people within the territory this paper covers had heard of Henry Ovens. Being senior member and elected reeve at the inaugural meeting of the District's council, Mr. Ovens had the distinction of piloting the M.D. through the critical time of transformation from small units to enlarged units, and that the work was done as well as it was, is in no small measure, due to Mr. Ovens' labor and energy. Not a young man any more, Mr. Ovens has a deep well of municipal experience to draw from and in addition, is the type of man that commands the respect of his fellow men. We rarely quote English phrases, they don't always go over so good, but in this case we feel quite safe in saying Henry Ovens is a good scout and a man whose word is as good as his bond.

RED CROSS WELL SUPPORTED—

IT MUST BE VERY gratifying to all within this area to read of the excellent showing made by the contributors to the Red Cross Society. The large number of people that have given something is indicative of real and genuine interest in the various lines of work the Association is called upon to do. That these tasks performed by the Red Cross Association are appreciated by the men and women in the services has been vouched for time and time again, in fact many people have learned from this campaign that it IS better to give than to receive.

NEW CAR STICKERS WILL BE OUT MARCH 15

New motor license stickers will be available with licenses to motorists on March 15, according to an announcement by the provincial secretary's department.

The car must display the 1943 license plate on the rear, no change having been made in that respect. The stickers are to be shown on the windshield and rear window, and show numbers that correspond to the license plate.

The Alberta Motor Association has been advised that the distribution of stickers to various issuing agen-[illegible] in the province has been practically completed.

The "AA" ration books also will be distributed at the same time the provincial license is issued.

In order to facilitate a prompt and efficient service, every owner of a passenger car is requested to note on the application form the number of his 1943-44 license plate. He is to mail it or present it to the issuing office from which he obtained his license plate during 1943.

HEAVY TOLL SHOWN AT LEVEL CROSSINGS

Of the 66 fatal motor vehicle accidents that occurred in Alberta last year, approximately one in every three was at a level crossing, it is pointed out by officials of the Alberta Motor Association.

There were 21 accidents at railroad crossings, resulting in deaths of 13 persons and injuries to 19.

Of the fatal accidents in the province, 23 occurred in cities, as follows: Edmonton, 14; Calgary, seven and Medicine Hat, two.

There were 18 persons jailed during the year for being intoxicated while in charge of a car, compared with 48 the year before. Three were sent to jail on manslaughter charges and five were imprisoned for dangerous or reckless driving.

The A.M.A. is continuing to urge motorists to use every possible care in approaching level crossings, in view of the heavy percentage of deaths from accidents of this type.

Letters From Near And Far

Editor's Note: The following from Olav Kirkelund, son of Mr. Kirkelund of Ryley, makes interesting reading. We always thought the thing to do when bombs were falling was to duck, but then if you did, how could you see the fireworks?

HAVE A SPOT OF TEA READY!

England, Feb. 8.

Dear Helen (Gladys and Olga),

I have just come back from tea, as it is called over here, and seeing I promised to write you again soon, I grimly set me down to the task. I had a good wash up and shave and apart from an awful cold, sore throat and a headache (which I seldom get) I feel just fine. So here goes—

My chum and myself, (a lad from Kirkland lake) and a few of the other boys are in our Nissen Hut (Tin Army Hut) while I write this and it is not too warm in here because we have just lit the fire. Over here due to the scarcity of coal there is a slight ? rationing system that maintains that fires must not be replenished after 10:30 p.m. or before 4:00 a.m. In this particular hut there are sixteen bunks and one table for the purpose I am now using it. Some of the boys are playing cards as usual, and the others are either in sleeping or out working. The blackout curtains are drawn and night is beginning to fall cold and black as it usually is.

I find the people over here very friendly and I rather like the country. We go into town occasionally and take the cutest girls we can find with us (sometimes). I think the Scotch girls are the nicest but that is a matter of opinion among us Canadians. The common people's cars go whizzing past, that is, the ones not waylaid by gas rationing and we look down at them. You see, they are just little wee things, the size of Baby Austens in Canada. The shows here are mostly ones that I have already seen in Canada but often other names and we can smoke in the theatres. Interruption—a theatre is where you see plays and a cinema is where they have movies, so when I say theatres I really mean movies. It is hard to find a restaurant due to the blackouts and we stumble through the darkened streets in search of one. There is no such thing as milk over here so I ordered, with my fish and chips, the nearest thing to it which was a milk shake and from the way it tasted, here is how it is made. Take one cup of milk, four cups of water, a little sweetening, foam, one and a half pinches of salt and some pink coloring and you have the same thing. The fish over here is very good tho'.

Last night we had a little excitement, especially for me when I didn't exactly expect a 4th of July celebration. It all started when the windows in our billet (which, incidentally, is in some ancient house) began to rattle and shake and a friend of mine told me there was a raid on somewhere. We stopped to listen [illegible] [illegible] somewhere in the distance came the bark of the ack-ack, growing louder and more intense. We turned out the gas light, drew back the blackout curtains, and gazed out the window at one of the prettiest and probably the most deadly sight I have ever seen. Far to the North lay London, but not too far, and apparently Jerry was trying to make a raid with the ack-ack thundering away. The exploding shells in the distance dotted the sky with a vivid pattern of pink stars which twinkled momentarily and were gone to be replaced by more and there was intermittently a vivid bright flash every time a bomb exploded. The rumble of exploding bombs could be heard quite plainly and the bitter ack-ack and once or twice a long red streak in the sky announced that a plane went down in flames amid numerous searchlights, ribbons from everywhere that converged over the city and penetrated the low hanging clouds. I think I was half out our upper storey window taking it all in and I think Jerry must have scattered with some of the bombers coming over our stations, because our own guns opening up sent a vibration through the house that almost threw me out the window. It all lasted a matter of minutes and then one by one of the searchlights were turned off and I went to bed. It was all very interesting but I think I prefer Canada and the thunder that precedes the rain occasionally out on our own rolling Alberta prairies. Remember that slogan "Come to Sunny Alberta and bring your umbrella,"—well, you need a tent over here.

If I stay with this mobile unit I will probably see a lot of England. Planes from here make sallys over the continent to take pictures but we often move to a new location. When we move, the whole station moves and everything down to the tables are supposed to be on the way within four hours after we are told.

Oh yes, tell Dad to have a spot of tea ready when I come home. You— a Weston biscuit would be good too! But right now I need cigarettes and chocolate badly, also a parcel, because they tell me an army moves on its stomach. The food here is very good, incidentally. Cheerio, Brother Olav.

PLEASANT DIVERSION FROM TRAINING

Somewhere in England,
January 29, 1944

Mr. Worton,
Dear Sir,

Have just received the November 18th issue of the Mercury. I will attempt to send a money order for payment but am sure it is still impossible to send money out of this country. I have been over here for the last six months and got the paper slightly late but it sure doesn't matter. It makes its rounds to everyone that is from that district.

I am enclosing a clipping from a magazine we get over here, it is from the "Canada Weekly" and shows Jack Beirnes. Had a letter from Frank and Raymond Hull. Frank is in the Central Mediterranean Forces and is a Bombadier. I hope to join him in the near future. Raymond is still here in England and in the Signal Corps.

Please keep the "Mercury" coming as it sure gives a lot of pleasant diversion from the training we are getting. Would like to hear of the whereabouts of Leonard and Charlie. If they are over here I could get in touch with them quite easily.

Hope this finds you in good health, I remain,

Sincerely,
Tom McIlbratney (Sgt.)

Dear Sir,

Enclosed please find $2.00 for which send the Tofield Mercury to our address. We would miss the Mercury if you should discontinue it. We were old residents of the Ministik District. Although we do not see many items of news from there, we think that your editorials are worth the price of the Mercury. I am sorry that I have neglected sending in our subscription before.

Yours truly,
Mrs. W. M. Carr

To The Editor

Enclosed you will find a picture of a German prison camp which I cut from the March issue of Liberty. The fellow which I have marked reminds me of one of the Tofield boys, i.e. Frank Dunn. Knowing Frank very well I take by the posture, shoulders, hair and the way he holds the hockey stick that this may be Frank although the face is not very clear. You may be interested in this enclosure and show some of the folks, especially Mr. Swift, who might be able to say for sure if this would be Frank. Hoping that this causes some interest for some one.

I get the Mercury every week and all the boys in our camp have a look especially some [illegible] the Mannix men who have worked at Tofield. I have to admit that the arrival of the paper is a looked for event every Thursday.

Trusting that you will pass the picture along and maybe find out if I am right in thinking this is Frank Dunn.

Yours truly,
Al. Innes

Editor's Note: It is a co-incidence that on Wednesday morning of last week a letter direct from Frank Dunn who is in a German prison camp was received in town. In this letter Frank mentions preparations being made to make a skating rink. At time of writing Frank was well, was studying [illegible] engineering course, but found life dreary.

FEED RESERVES

Farmers who keep cattle should maintain feed reserves. The Lethbridge experimental station suggests that farmers should aim at having three tons of forage on hand every fall for every mature animal. On an average a ton of hay will see a cow through the winter. Three tons will be sufficient for two or three winters.

By harvesting wild hay and crested wheat grass hay and be conserving straw in good years it should be possible to maintain the objective of three tons of forage on hand every fall. In the event of a succession of dry years it may be necessary to harvest cereal hay. In the drier areas of Southern Alberta cereal hay grown on fallow has yielded an 8-year average of one ton per acre and never less than half a ton per acre in any of the eight years.

The low down on reasons for a suspension of meat rationing may be explained in part by the fact that during the first 8 weeks of 1944 inspected packing plants of Canada slaughtered 780,000 more hogs, 56,000 more cattle, 10,000 more calves and 30,000 more sheep and lambs than in the same weeks of 1943. The tremendous impact of this on the handling facilities of packing plants can be measured by the knowledge that the increase in hog slaughtering was 80 per cent over 1943. It is reported that there were over 182,000,000 pounds of meat in cold storage at that time, nearly twice as much as last year. It would be well to "save your meat coupons" as cautioned because one day we may be in a position to ship lots more meat across the Atlantic where its badly needed.

In connection with civic or municipal elections, regulations now are that members of the Armed Forces may participate but no special leave will be given for campaigning or other reason, and if elected no special consideration insofar as leave is concerned will be given to attend meetings or other duties entailed in holding office.

Hog producers will be interested in the estimate that marketings are expected to be heavy throughout the first half of this year. The highest level in history was reached when at Dec. 1, 1943 there was a total of 9,473,000 hogs on Canadian farms, an increase of 22 per cent over 1942. The increase was more marked in the three prairie provinces, and common to all others but Ontario.

While the boys overseas have a constant date with the enemy, in their spare moments it's reading that counts most with them. So now we learn that unwrapped magazines can be handed in to any post office in Canada for forwarding to troops overseas. Zone collection and forwarding depots have been set up. Present plans call for shipment of 80,000 current issue mags each month. If you're through with your favorite detective, movie, western or sports magazine, give the boys a break.

Women are certainly doing their part in this war; active on the [illegible] front in a hundred and one ways; latest figures show that there are more than 39,948 in the armed forces of Canada. On a per capita basis of total female population (ages 18-45) in December, 1941 there were 1 in 1250; in December 1942, one in 194 and today one in 86.

If you are worried about the right kind of flag to fly when a distinctive Canadian flag is required, take Prime Minister King's word for it. The Red Ensign is correct dress for the occasion, he told the Commons.

You'll probably hear more about the health insurance plan, recently revised and submitted to the Social Security Committee of the House of Commons, a plan purported to give complete health services to the people. In a nutshell the maximum levy will be $50 for married folk, $30 for single persons. It will cost adults 12 dollars a year plus a percentage of income from those in the income-tax class amounting to 3 per cent for single and five per cent for married persons.

Stamp Drive Over Top With A Bang

"The special campaign conducted by the Food Industry of Canada during the month of February to sell $2,000,000 in war savings stamps has been exceeded by more than fifteen per cent according to figures received at the end of the last day," Mr. S. H. Young, National Chairman of the drive, stated. "This splendid achievement," Mr. Young said, "was the result of the co-operation given by more than forty thousand retail food outlets, restaurants and hotels."

In addition to selling the stamps across their counters many splendid ideas illustrating the need to buy stamps were developed by merchants all across Canada. In Fort Frances, Ontario, a local store dressed a window to show what price control had accomplished, as compared to the same period in the last war when price control was unknown.

In one window a 98 pound sack of flour was displayed, with a price tag affixed reading $7.50, which was the price of flour during 1919 without the benefit of price control. In the other side of the window an identical sack of flour was displayed marked $2.50, being the 1944 price under price control. Surrounding this sack of flour were various items tagged with present day prices, which altogether totalled $7.50. The whole idea of the display appealed to the public to invest the difference in cost of flour, in war savings. Price control was making these savings possible.

In Cardale Manitoba, a merchant set his own quota or sale of war stamps during the month, which represented $100 for every local boy and girl in uniform. He placed all their photos in a show case and listed their names on a large hanger. The people of Cardale were so enthusiastic about this plan that within five days after he had arranged his display, his sales in war savings stamps totalled $1,294.00.

Secretary - Treasurer's Report On Office Conditions

The Reeve and Council,
M.D. of Beaver No. 486.
Dear Sirs,

At the last meeting of Council, your Secretary was instructed to make a report on the office set up with suggestions for any changes calculated to increase the efficiency of the office The following observations are submitted:

Reviewing very briefly the operation of the Municipal Office of the M D of Beaver No 486, during the past year it may be pointed out that the work involved in this office was concerned with an area formerly covered by three and a fraction old municipal districts Actually the duties performed would not have been so heavy had four complete municipal districts been merged to form this District, as a great deal of time was required by the several adjustments which necessitated a lot of time spent with the Administrative officials of the other Districts concerned as well as extra meetings of our Council The work has been equal to that previously performed by four old secretaries and in most cases the former secretaries found their work quite heavy In fact, in the old Districts extra help was usually necessary from time to time either furnished by the District or supplied by the secretary

The delay in centralizing the office and the several weeks taken up with the alterations to the present office also greatly handicapped your staff The services of a stenographer were not obtainable over a considerable length of time Having all this in mind, and the fact, also, that the office handled the Wheat Acreage Reductions over the whole District, it was expected that your Staff would find it absolutely impossible to keep all the work up to date and to be in position at all times to give prompt, efficient service However, by putting in overtime almost every evening throughout the whole period, it is believed the first year was completed without having given too much cause for complaint and it was a matter of considerable satisfaction to the members of your staff that the Financial Statement for the year ended Dec 31, 1943 was out in good time and disclosed the books and records of the office to be in good order

The necessity for overtime is not conducive to satisfied office workers, as will be readily admitted, and having in mind the importance of having a contented office staff, your Secretary would no doubt have made recommendations for additional help, had it not appeared impossible to accommodate extra help in the limited office space available

Your secretary has held the view since the merger took effect that given reasonable office facilities, a staff of three should be able to take care of the office work without the necessity of putting in overtime, when once proper records and filing systems had been set up The effect of the amalgamation of tax arrears and the consolidated levy, it has been thought, would reduce office work very considerably This has been borne out by such information as we have been able to obtain as to how the change has affected other municipal offices It is understood from conversations with the secretary of the M D of Wainwright, that the change in tax procedure has resulted in a reduction in their municipal office work of from a quarter to a third.

In conclusion it may not be amiss to point out that until such time as adequate office space and facilities are made available, your office staff will operate under a considerable handicap and may not be able to give the prompt service ratepayers may expect. However the staff will endeavor to carry on to the reasonable satisfaction of all concerned

Respectfully submitted,
J W McMULLEN,
Secretary-Treasurer

R. W. Pincott Passes At Nanaimo

Word was received through the daily press that R. W. Pincott, well-known former Tofield resident, passed away at Nanaimo on Thursday, March 10th.

Mr. Pincott came to Tofield from South Africa around 1911-12 and was known through his office work which had a semi legal character. He was in turn, secretary of the agricultural society, following the late Joseph Rogers, secretary of the Board of Trade, Councillor and Mayor. He started what was known as the Pincott Children's Playground fund. The family left Tofield for Nanaimo, B.C., about ten years ago

Since living at Nanaimo Mr. Pincott has done much farmer organization work along co-operative lines Mrs. Pincott predeceased him just over a year ago.

He leaves one son Clifford, an officer in the army and one daughter, Bette, a clerical worker in the telephone service.

Bats In The Belfry

We at least feel we have an edge on those fellows who have seen the first gopher, first crow, or the earliest robin. Going home between 1:30 and 2:00 a.m. last Friday morning, the Mercury Staff saw at least one bat flying around, perhaps two There was a breeze and it was snowing quite heavily, though not cold. As the three of us passed the light at the corner of the bank we were surprised to see a bat darting here and there around the light It was the first bat we had ever seen in winter. One block farther north we again saw a bat flying around the electric light there, it may or may not have been the same one. This is the first time we have ever observed bats flying during a snow storm and they appeared strange creatures covered as they were, with snow

CORRECTION

This week, like Uriah Heep in Dickens's "David Copperfield," we have to be "very, very 'umble". First of all we have to apologize to Mr. Floyd Baker for prematurely awarding him the title "Honourable" Then again apologies are due Reeve Anderson of M.D. of Beaver for getting his initials mixed. It should be J. A. instead of A.J. as we announced it. Thirdly, we have to correct the heading "Over a ton of forage crop seed ordered" to "Over ten tons of Forage Crop Seed Ordered" To expect to be absolutely free of newspaper errors is probably expecting too much, but we can and do express the hope that they come singly and not bunch up on us as they did last week.

So, So Sorry! But Who Wouldn't?

GLAD TO KNOW IT
(Vegreville Observer)

From our good friend, the Tofield Mercury, we glean the interesting information that the government is about to take over, gravel and maintain the road leading north from Tofield to the Vegreville highway This is the road from Tofield which comes into the Vegreville-Edmonton highway at what is called the Chapman corner—all motorists know it well enough. The people have been agitating for years to have this section of road receive proper attention and it is most pleasant to find that at long last the government will do its clear duty.

It seems that Mr Floyd M Baker, M.L.A. for that Division, has been responsible for the action taken. The Tofield Mercury immediately bestows on Mr. Baker the title of "Hon " The title appears to be well-deserved in so far as the particular instance of Mr Baker's highly honorable work on behalf of this piece of road is concerned. But, so far, Mr. Baker has not been a minister of the Crown and the title "Honorable" belongs only to that super-elect crowd. However, just to be a good sport, the Observer will nominate Mr. Baker as a 'Right Honorable", which is an improvement on the Mercury and it doesn't cost us anything at all

THE COST OF HANDLING FARMERS' PRODUCTS

The opinion has often been expressed that merchants who handle farmers' products take far too great a toll for their services. Some have even expressed the view that these charges amount to almost as much as the farmers receive.

An estimate has been made on the handling of hogs and bacon by the Hon. J. G. Taggart, Minister of Agriculture for the Province of Saskatchewan. Here are the figures he gives. For 1943 the value of bacon and of pork offals shipped to Britain was 406 million dollars. The distribution was as follows: To farmers 287 million dollars; to marketing agencies 5 million, transportation to seaboard 20 million; to packing plants for their processing and services 34 million, which is slightly over 8 per cent of the sales value.

I have worked out a similar distribution for grain and I find that the charges on grain for transportation to lakehead terminals and to the Grain Trade for handling the farmer's grain at the elevator, including processing and storing this grain until the buyers require it, is about the same percentage of the sales value for the separate charges as with hogs and bacon.

In considering all this it seems to me that not only are the farmers' hogs and their grain—and no doubt many other farm products—handled in an exceedingly efficient manner, but also at a surprisingly low cost to the farmer.

BRIGHTON, A NEW PRODUCTIVE HULLESS OATS

(Experimental Farms News)

Brighton is a new variety of hulless oats developed from a Markton x Laurel cross made at the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa. Like its Markton parent, it is resistant to smut, while in yield it surpasses its Laurel parent.

In tests conducted at Beaverlodge, reports E. C. Stacey, Brighton has matured slightly later than Banner and Victory and has about the same length and strength of straw. In yield, Brighton surpasses Laurel by a considerable margin and on a kernel basis has outyielded both Banner and Victory in a four-year average.

The high yield of Brighton is rather unexpected since neither parent is particularly high-yielding at Beaverlodge. Apparently this variety is well adapted to the soil and climatic conditions of the Peace River region. Good results, however, have also been obtained with Brighton in other parts of Canada in comparison with Laurel, and generally speaking it has outyielded the latter variety in widely scattered tests. For the northern districts, its long growing season makes it somewhat risky, especially as hulless oats must be threshed in good condition.

Seed stocks are being multiplied but are still scarce. A few pounds were distributed to careful growers in 1943 and by the end of 1944 there should be enough for all who may be interested. The present stocks require further purification and work in this direction is proceeding as rapidly as possible.

During the first six months of the present crop year Canadian flour mills ground 54,814,407 bushels of wheat, manufacturing 12,411151 barrels of flour.

BEER INFORMATION

In order to clarify further the situation respecting the distribution of beer in Alberta, I find it necessary to emphasize that all the available beer which the breweries can supply will be released to the public immediately.

The breweries have been caught unawares by the sudden reversal of policy on the part of Prime Minister Mackenzie King and, although well stocked with brew, must age beer for at least three months. Therefore it may be a month or two before the existing quotas may be raised.

The brewers have informed us that their output for March will be about 530,000 dozen pints. That will mean that there will be one dozen pints available for each of the 224,—266 permit holders registered on March 11, and an additional number who may register before the end of the month. Under normal conditions based on the average number of permit holders, we would be able to increase the quota to two dozen pints per permit holder.

Increase in quotas of draught beer to hotels may be about 10 per cent in April as compared with an immediate increase of a much larger percentage of bottled beer to permit holders.

Restrictions on bottle tops are still enforced by the metals controller and breweries are limited to 80 per cent of their 1942 supplies so this condition may likewise restrict somewhat the supply of bottled beer until such time as these restrictions are lifted.

'Bugs' in the Grain Bins

Seven or eight years ago, a distinguished authority on insects stated that, in Western Canada, we need never worry about insect damage to our stored grain. Most authorities are occasionally wrong, and he was no exception.

It is not our purpose to spread false alarm, but merely to draw attention to the defensive measures at our disposal. In guarding against losses due to insects in farm stored grain, we have three powerful allies. They are: a cold climate, a dry climate and a very efficient Division of Entomology in the Dominion Department of Agriculture. Despite these advantages losses have been suffered and will continue unless the necessary precautions are observed.

The best prevention against loss is storing only dry grain, and keeping it dry by means of ventilated granaries which exclude rain and snow and which are constructed so as to provide an air space between the floor and the ground. As added insurance, it is wise to turn grain during cold weather or move it and, if possible clean it, during very cold weather.

If storing tough grain is unavoidable, it should be examined regularly and, at the first sign of heating or infestation by mites or insects, it should be run through a fanning mill, threshing machine or combine.

All Line Elevator agents have copies of a Dominion Government leaflet on this subject and, also, the "Seedtime and Harvest" leaflet which gives more detail than space allows here.

FOUR TESTS WHEN BUYING A FARM

If you decide to buy a farm, the question is how are you to know what kind of a farm to buy, observes J. Coke, Economic Division, Dominion Department of Agriculture, in the Economic Annalist. There are many factors to be considered, he says but there are four unfailing tests. The first is soil. There is no way of overcoming the defects of infertile soil without incurring excessive costs. The second test is crop yields which are related to soil, climate, typography, and farm practices. Consistently low yields mean low productivity. Third, there is location in relation to markets which will determine what sort of farming you may profitably engage in. The markets are the basis of the net income you can get out of that farm. The fourth test is what kind of neighbours you will have and what they seem to have been able to get out of their land. You may prove to be a better or worse farmer than the present operator. The neighbours tell the story of what you may be able to do.

Mr. Coke gives the following advice: "Before you buy a farm, ask yourself where does the money come from? A farm must produce an income. The income you can get out of it determines what you can afford to pay for it. In reaching a decision, take past performance as your guide. Buying a farm is a long-time investment. A farm is a business and a home. It emphasizes the permanency of farming. That is something that some have not been concerned about recently and others unable to attain. It will always be impossible for some because they will lag behind in the pursuit of a good living.

"In an ordered economy, agriculture should enjoy a degree of permanency consistent with the idea of a dynamic world. In the last 20 years agriculture in Canada has undergone many changes. Still others appear to be in store. It is necessary that the majority of farmers be able to farm efficiently and to adjust farm practices and management to changing conditions, so that agriculture will contribute a full share to the national income and national life. Inflated and deflated land values will prevent farmers from entering into this happy hunting ground."

FEEDING BEES IN SPRING

The proper food for colonies of bees is the nectar and pollen they gather from flowers. In Alberta, in the spring, there is sometimes a lack of these foods. A substitute for this nectar or honey is made of sugar syrup—one part cane or beet sugar to two parts of water. Supplies of sugar have been made available for this purpose by the Administrator. A permit to purchase sugar may be obtained by applying to W.G. le Maistre, Provincial Apiarist, Department of Agriculture, Edmonton.

Combs of pollen, saved from the previous year should be given to colonies in the spring. If these are not available a substitute of soy bean flour, made in a stiff dough with a little sugar syrup, can be placed on waxed paper over the frames of the brood chamber.

Unless colonies are properly properly provided with these foods, they will not rear large enough quantities of brood to become honey producers in July, the main honey month.

GOVERNMENT HELPS HANDICAPPED CHILDREN

Do you know that Alberta children who are blind or deaf need not, because of this handicap, remain without an education? While there are no special schools for the education of such children within the province, the Government makes a generous provision for their training at special schools in other provinces. Those who are blind go to the Ontario School for the Blind at Brantford. During the present year 41 young Albertans who are deaf are in attendance at McKay School in Montreal. Recently the Deputy Minister of Education visited this school and received a great welcome. The children wished all the news from Alberta and he was kept busy for more than half an hour answering questions. MacKay School is a private institution [illegible] ago for the English speaking deaf of Quebec. Recently it has been enlarged so that it is now in a position to accept students from other provinces. Dr. McNally reports that our children are all well, very comfortable and happy.

The Department of Education requests that anyone reading this news item will bring it to the attention of any parents of children either blind or deaf. It frequently hears of families who know nothing of this educational service. Provision is made for transportation, [illegible] and tuition of the pupils. Costs to the parents include clothing and pocket money. The Department will be grateful to anyone furnishing information of such children.

NOTE FOR TO-DAY

Their gift is not in golden coin:
In higher values must we measure
Lives offered up in Freedom's cause
While we but lend an earthly treasure.

With all we have we must support
Our men and women in this fight
That peace may come again to Earth
And all the world be ruled by right.

—J. N. Stephenson.

FARM MANAGEMENT REQUIRED

We heard a farmer state his production objective this way. "To find out what essential products his farm could produce best; to produce them as efficiently as possible; and to keep an eye on the future so that he could stay in production." This sounds like a pretty good objective to us. That farmer will be doing some careful planning these days! Here are some of his problems:

1. What crops are to be sown in what fields next spring?
2. Are seed supplies on hand and ready for planting?
3. Are there any machinery repairs to be ordered?
4. How can this whole community make better use of their machinery equipment?
5. Are provisions being made for maintaining the soil fertility and controlling weeds?

But this is just the beginning. His livestock could offer some fundamental questions too! —Farm for Victory Committee.

IRON VITAL MINERAL FOR LITTLE PIGS

It is hard sometimes to realize that often very tiny amounts of some mineral are vital to the health of little pigs. Iron is one of these. A new born pig grows rapidly, and quickly uses the supply of iron stored in its liver at birth. This is one [illegible] which the sow does not supply in her milk. If outside the pig gets the iron he needs from eating earth and bits of grass and roots. If inside the tiny amounts of iron needed to keep the pig healthy and lively must be supplied by the feeder.

This can be done, either by supplying earth or sods, or chemical iron in some form. Clear directions on methods and quantities can be obtained from the nearest agricultural college or experimental farm.

Important things to remember about iron are that it is a food and without it pigs may be seriously weakened. Like other food, a regular method of feeding it should be adopted and followed. With sods or earth the pig can eat what it needs, with chemical iron the pig has little choice and must take what it is given, so that it is important that directions be followed to the letter, as feeding too much iron is not only wasteful but may be harmful.

SEED POTATOES BROUGHT WEST

Ottawa, March 20—Premium prices on certified seed potatoes are continued by Wartime Prices and Trade Board order, aimed at speeding movement of seed stock west from Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick and to increase the supply of improved seed stock for growers in the west.

Premium allowances on the basis of Montreal ceiling for Canada grade no. 1, table stock are 1 cent per pound above the ceiling for certified seed, 1½ cents per pound for Foundation seed.

No increase in price for seed potato storage will be allowed above the adjustment made on March 6, the Board announced.

The Game Branch, Department of Lands and Mines, is declaring an open season on muskrats, during the period March 15th to April 20th, both dates inclusive, in that part of the Province lying to the south of the North Saskatchewan River. The trapping must be done on a Limited Trapper's License, the fee for which is $2.00 and obtainable from any Royal Canadian Mounted Police Detachment or Game Guardian in the area. The licence will permit any person who is owner, purchaser under an Agreement for Sale or lessee of land in that part of the Province lying to the south of the North Saskatchewan River, which land is used for farming or ranching purposes, as well as any member of such person's immediate family, such as a parent or a child over the age of sixteen years actually residing on the land or some part thereof, to trap muskrats on his own or adjoining land. The shooting or spearing of muskrats is prohibited.

THE RUBICON
By William Winter

One other bitter drop to drink,
And then—no more!
One little pause upon the brink,
And then—go o'er.
One sigh— and then the vibrant morn
Of perfect day.
When my free spirit, newly born,
Will soar away.

One pang—and I shall rend the thrall
Where grief abides
And generous death will show me all
That now he hides.
And lucid, in that second birth,
I shall discern,
What all the sages of the earth
Have died to learn.

One motion—and the stream is crossed,
So dark, so deep!
And I shall triumph or be lost
In endless sleep.
Then onward! Whatsoe'er my fate
I shall not care.
No sin, or sorrow, love or hate,
Can touch me there.

ADULT EDUCATION—

MOST PEOPLE will agree that whatever form economic and political changes take after this war, that there will be changes. It is quite evident to all of us who have lived through the periods preceding the first world war, the war itself, the prosperous twenties, the depression thirties and into the destructive forties, that economic and political beliefs, considered sound doctrine in our youth, have either worn themselves out or were faulty to start off with. Perhaps it would be more generous to those who have passed on, to say that many of the political and economic truths have, due to a variety of causes become obsolete, rather than say they were wrong in the first place. Because after all, we just naturally take for granted improvements and changes in every field of human endeavor, so why not equally take for granted improvements and changes along the line of political and economic thinking. For instance, getting something for nothing, believed an unnatural and ridiculous thought in the 1900's may, through sheer development of governmental technique, be tried out in the 1950's. This may in the future become as much a necessity as schools are a necessity to harmonious and full living today.

However, for the present at least this is beside the point. What we would like to comment upon is the immense and increasing wave of adult education that is sweeping over all countries, where, by standards of book learning people are deemed to be enlightened. "Written on the wall" so all may read in some countries, and published surreptiously from underground sources in others, there is a constant stream of "adult education" spreading out everywhere. Not all of it agrees as to quality, tone, texture or kind. Some is harsh, the rantings of demagogues; some is subtle, verging on to the deceptive; some is reasonable enough, but blunt and imperious; and some is simply informative, leaving what emphasis there is to be placed upon the message up to the recipient.

The technique of presenting this education has reached the elevation of a high art and in one case at least has reverted right back to the primer first reader style of description. This week we received the booklet "John Britain" which purports to describe to the world at large the life and family surroundings of a typical Britisher, coupled with its relation to both peace and war. The remarkable feature is its clarity and few words. Literally copying the style of the old school room primer, a few words in large type, a few more in smaller type and a good photo has done the trick. Thousands of words could not have done it better, certainly not for busy people. This is just one form of adult education.

Another form is the moving picture of which theatre patrons in this area have had experience. For some long time now the National Film Board have been giving "Free Shows" at Tofield. The early shows were mostly devoted to war and preparations for war and were well filmed and aptly described. Lately, so we have been informed, the Canadian theme has been stressed as well as the war theme and by attending these National Film Board Shows, one may gain an excellent knowledge of different parts of the country he lives in. Canada is rapidly becoming a great agricultural, industrial and exporting nation and the work of one section of the country is often quite different to that in another. But politically and economically we are bound together and should fully understand each other. This form of adult education teaches one to be proud of his or her native country or country of adoption and is so designed to interest and inform at the same time.

Information is to hand that the distributors of National Film Board Films are not overly pleased with the response at Tofield. First there is no local body directly co-operating and secondly the crowd is not quite as orderly as it might be. Neither one of these complaints should be difficult to remedy. If the idea is accepted that it is adult education as well as entertainment that is being presented it should not be so hard to keep order, and as to local co-operation, the Community League is just looking for things like that to do.

Walter Winchell In New York
Things I Never Knew 'Til Now . . .
(About Canada's War Effort)

Canada is the only one of America's Allies which has not used Lease Lend help. Most of her money payments to the Allies have been outright gifts because Canada is opposed to piling up war debts. The United States is Canada's best customer; and Canada is at the top of the list of our best customers. Canada is the world's largest producer of aluminum. Last year she produced more than the whole world did in 1939. Canada is the world's largest producer of nickel and is practically the only source of supply available to the United Nations. Canada is the world's largest producer of asbestos, terrifically important on aircraft carriers and battleships. She is a heavy producer of lead, zinc and mercury, and the most important discovery of tungsten ore yet found on this continent is now being developed by the Canadian government direct. It's the backbone of battle armor.

Without Canadian radium the field services and hospitals of the United Nations' armies would be almost helpless. Canada is producing five times as much armor plate, guns and tools as she did in 1939. She is producing sixteen types of gun carriages and mountings, although before she entered the war she had never manufactured a big gun. She has delivered 100,000 units to date. Canada has the largest small arms factory in the British Empire. She has produced more than a million rifles and enough ammunition to fire 200 shots at every soldier in the German army. Canada is second only to us in building ships, although she had not built a seagoing cargo ship in 20 years when Hitler marched on Poland.

About five out of every six Canadian soldiers you see are volunteers—the Canadian army has the largest volunteer force in the world. The Canadian Navy which had only 15 ships before the war, now has more than 700 at sea. The Canadian Navy is 45 times larger in men. Canada provided the invention which licked the magnetic mine.

The Royal Canadian Air Force has 200,000 men manning its planes. There are 36 RCAF squadrons overseas. The Royal Air Force itself depends for one quarter of its strength on RCAF crews. The British Commonwealth Air Training Plan is based in Canada. Practically every man in the service of His Majesty, who has anything to do with a plane, learned how to handle his job in Canada. Nineteen out of twenty of the boys who are dropping the bad news on Berlin got the know-how in Canada. Three out of four of the men who plot the courses of every plane in the British Empire learned to do it in the country north of our border.

Canada has mobilized the mightiest of all her resources, her fighting people. Forty thousand women are in the Canadian armed forces. Over 5,000 are in the Canadian Navy Services.

When the smoke of war clears, Canada will emerge as one of the very great powers of the world. Canada and Alaska are the air crossroads for Europe and Asia. Before the half-century mark has been reached giant airliners will be going over the top to Europe, Asia and Africa, non-stop from Canada. Canada already has the tallest office bldg. in the British Empire, the largest hotel in the British Empire and the largest fishing grounds in the world. The Canadian Pacific Railway is the world's largest transportation system and has responded to the war challenge as magnificently as American transportation. It also operates a fleet of ocean steamships and an expanding number of air routes.

The Canadian Foreign Office declared war on Japan while Pearl Harbour was still burning—a full day ahead of us. This is a completely independent diplomatic service, and our diplomats in Washington say that it is the finest in the world, which is a strange coincidence, since that's what our army and navy men say of the Canadian fighters. Out of this war has come closer Canadian-American relationship than ever before. Our best customer to the North is also our best protection when the chips are down.

The Maple Leaf forever.

THE CARE OF PACKAGE BEES

(Experimental Farms News)

Package bees will soon be arriving in Canada from the United States and preparation for their care should be made beforehand. Those who are expecting such packages should first of all make arrangements with their nearest express or customs officials for prompt delivery, remembering that a war exchange tax of ten per cent of the bees' value must be paid to Customs before the bees are released.

For each package one hive fitted with ten drawn combs or full sheets of foundation is needed to house the bees and in addition from ten to fifteen pounds of sugar or honey are required to feed them.

As soon as the packages are received stand them in a cool, shady place and feed the bees by sprinkling a thin solution of sugar and water on the screening of the packages, states C. B. Goderham, Dominion Apiarist. During late afternoon or evening release the bees in their hives following the directions that accompany the bees or as given in Special Pamphlet No. 3 Wartime Production Series a copy of which may be obtained from the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa. If the weather is cloudy and cool the bees may be released immediately upon arrival.

It is not the bees you receive that will produce the honey crop, but those which can be reared between the time the packages are placed in the hives and the time the clovers are in bloom. This means that the bees must not be allowed to run short of food at any time. Start feeding as soon as the bees are in the hive and keep feeding until the bees are well established and obtaining enough from the fields for their needs. The best food is honey, but never give it to bees unless absolutely sure that it was produced by disease free colonies. White sugar dissolved in equal parts water is the best substitute. To secure the sugar for feeding bees ask your Provincial Apiarist for the necessary permit giving him your full name and address, the number of colonies or packages to be fed and the minimum amount of sugar required.

ALBERTA GETS 800,000 NEW RATION BOOKS

"Some 800,000 new ration books are now in the hands of 53 Local Ration Boards situated throughout the province and the Peace River Block of Northern British Columbia, ready for distribution to citizens throughout this region," says C. G. McKee, regional superintendent of rationing.

From Local Ration Boards these copies of Ration Book 4 will be allotted to over 1000 conveniently situated centres to which citizens will apply during the days of distribution.

Volunteers man each distribution centre, prepared to check Ration Book 3, and record the information from it to Ration Book 4. "Volunteers working all across Canada saved the country over half a million dollars during the last distribution campaign," the superintendent stated.

"Personal distribution is more effective than mailing, and relieves already overburdened post offices," he said.

Mr. McKee reiterated points to be observed in obtaining new ration books:

Watch your local newspaper for distribution dates which may vary in each locality, and for the address of distributing centres.

Late applicants will not be able to obtain new ration books until April 17.

Print information on the red-lettered card, RB99 in the back of Ration Book 3. Note line 5 which requires that you fill in the name or number of the municipal district in which you reside.

Present Ration book 3 to obtain Ration Book 4.

Do not destroy Ration Book 3 which contains F coupons for canning sugar, not yet valid.

Any one member of a family, or of a remote community, if over 16 years of age can obtain ration books for the others, if he presents their copies of Ration Book 3 with card RB99 properly completed.

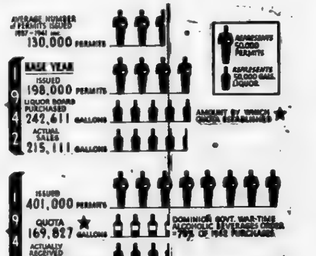
ALBERTA'S Liquor SITUATION

The Alberta Liquor Control Board is faced today with the cold mathematics of trying to supply more than double the number of permit holders with heavily curtailed liquor quotas. Greater demand rather than reduced supply is mainly responsible for this situation.



The Alberta Liquor Control Board purchased in 1942 base year, 242,611 gallons, actual sales in 1942—215,111 gallons. From these figures it is seen that the amount purchased was in excess of sales by 27,500 gallons, which went into stock. In 1943, the Alberta quota for liquor was 169,827 gallons (70 per cent of 1942 purchases). Of this amount, only 157,000 gallons was received. Thus, the province received 12,818 gallons less than it was allowed under its quota.

The sales for 1943 totalled 218,207 gallons. The difference between the amount received and the amount sold was made up out of stocks on hand.

ALBERTA L LIBRARY EDMONTON

Community League Holds Supper Meeting

The Tofield Community League Luncheon was held in the Royal Alexandra Hotel on Wednesday evening, March 29th. Certainly another enthusiastic meeting took place with very interesting discussions.

The Chairman welcomed the representatives from the Students' Union present, Ralph Harrison and Herbert Warner.. Ralph later responded for the Students' Union assuring the League that the students were very interested in the moves of the League and especially in the proposed hall. He also informed the League that the students had sanctioned a donation of $5 00 and assured the league that the Students' Union would give all the help they could, and that they anticipated a further donation in the future. It is certainly gratifying to hear the younger fellows get up on their feet and express their opinions. We hope to hear them enter into the discussions more as time goes on, for after all, it is the opinions of these younger people that should be taken into consideration as they are the ones to benefit from the constructive gains in the future.

Mr. Harrison brought to the attention of the League that it was possible to have a school giving a six week course for Farm boys in the repairing and looking after farm machinery. The League voted unanimously to sponsor such a school and Mr Harrison was instructed to get in touch with the proper authority to organize the school.

A discussion took place on the report given by Mr. Clutterham on the poor crowds the National Film board were getting at the Saturday night free shows. The League is making an effort to get better crowds, first, by having the date of future shows changed to Friday instead of Saturday and by seeing the Film is properly advertised. Also sponsoring a Committee to look after the chairman and discussion groups. It was considered that if the people knew what kind of shows were put on there would be a much better attendance.

Another very important discussion took place on the possibility of having a hospital in the Tofield vicinity. The chairman finally appointed Mr Stinson, Mr. A Harrison and Mr G. Allan as a committee to look into the matter and give a report at the next meeting.

The next meeting of the League will be held in the Town Hall, April 12th, at 8 p m

Sixth Victory Loan Campaign Pot Simmering

Canada's sixth Victory Loan Campaign will be launched on April 16, and for the past week or two there has been a gradual quickening of interest in the coming event. The amount of bonds to be sold throughout the Dominion will be one billion, two hundred million ($1,200,000,000) and the actual campaign will last [illegible] three weeks, commencing Monday, April 17th.

Locally, Victory Bond interest has been quickened by the visit of Mr Sutherland, district organizer, who visited here and met some of the committee two weeks ago. Last week Mr A J H McCauley, unit organizer, attended a two-day conference of chairmen, organizers committeemen, etc., at Calgary and returned enthusiastic as to the prospects of the coming loan.

The organization here will be much the same as in previous loans. The Tofield quota has not been set, but it is not expected it will be larger than in the fifth loan.

ARMY NOTES

A haze of dust and gun smoke lay heavily over Casa Berardi, tiny Italian hamlet on the Ortona-Orsogna road. From every splintered window every wall and pile of crumbled masonry, spewed leaden death and high explosives. German infantry and tanks had made a hot spot of Casa Berardi: a death trap of the deep gully which lay before it.

On the other side of that gully, pinned down by murderous fire, a badly battered company of French Canada's Royal 22nd gritted their teeth, hung on and fought back. They had been ordered to assault Casa Berardi—and take it. Only a countermanding order could stop them trying.

Flattened behind scanty cover lay 35-year-old Major Paul Triquet, of Cabano, Quebec, the only officer not wounded or dead. Half his men were killed or out of action. Enemy fire was cutting into his dwindling force from both flanks. The moment was desperate. He couldn't stay where he was. But to retire — after having fought such a long and bloody way . . .

Suddenly bursts of enemy fire crashed out behind him. His weary soldiers swung around to face the new attack. They were getting it on all sides now. Something had to be done — and at once!

Major Paul Triquet did it. Leaping to his feet he scrambled over the rubble and waved his "Van Doos" forward.

"The enemy's in front of us! Behind us! On our flanks!" he yelled above the din. "There's only one safe place. That's on the objective."

This week, those brave words have been flashed to all corners of the Allied world—and beyond! The story of how Paul Triquet won the Victoria Cross, how he led his men out of a certain death-trap, fought a way down into that murderous gully and up the other side and slugged it out with the enemy until the tattered remnants of his tiny band reached and held the outskirts of Casa Berardi itself—is already a Canadian legend.

Paul Triquet has become a national hero. The second Canadian soldier to win the V.C. in this greatest of all wars. The third member of the world-famous Royal 22nd Regiment to receive the highest recognition of bravery the King can bestow on a soldier.

But the exploit of this tall, lean French-Canadian soldier has won more than a medal. It has captured the imagination of Allied fighting men everywhere. It has sent a ripple of wonderful pride through the whole of Canada.

At Cabano, Quebec, the little lumbering town of his birth, people are speaking his name with tears in their eyes. And pride! Has not Paul Triquet proved himself a true soldier of Canada? Is he not the soldier son of Major Georges Triquet who fought to defend his beloved France in 1914 and today, at 63, commands "A" company of Les Fusiliers du Saint Laurent a unit of reserves? Is he not the grandson of Louis-Desire Triquet who fought the Hun half a century before that in the Franco-Prussian War? And the great-grandson of another Paul Triquet, who endured the hardships of, and won glory in, the Crimea?

All Canada unites in paying tribute to Paul Triquet and feels honest pride and admiration for his heroic exploit. But the deep personal joy and the tingling, heartfelt pride belong forever to the townsfolk of Cabano, Quebec. To Mama and Papa Triquet, waiting happily in their big frame house on the hill for the sound of his voice—for the sound of his footsteps on the porch.

For—and the old people have it on good authority—Major Paul Triquet, V.C. is coming home.

MORE ALFALFA AND CLOVER CROPS NEEDED

Alberta farmers are urged by the Field Crops Branch to take immediate steps to obtain their forage crop seed. If difficulty is experienced, District Agriculturists will be pleased to advise regarding available seed supplies of all forage crops.

Alfalfa and clover crops are needed on every farm. Since they are rich in proteins, minerals and vitamins they provide a most palatable and nutritious feed for live stock. These crops are also important from the standpoint of maintaining or increasing the fertility of the soil. Bacteria in the nodules on the roots of inoculated plants utilize the nitrogen of the air and make it available for the use of the legumes. The fertility of the grey or wooded soil is most noticeably improved by these crops.

In weed control, alfalfa also plays an important part. Because it is a vigorous growing perennial which usually produces two or three crops of hay a year it is a serious competitor with most weeds. The vigour of growth combined with regular cuttings makes it very useful in weed control.

CONTROL SPRING FIRES TO SAVE MORE BIRDS

As winter retreats before the impact of spring, ducks and other birds are moving northward to their summer home. Ducks are already nesting. Arriving in our Canadian West, they will establish nests; and promptly get to work, producing another crop.

This year, as always, 70 per cent of the potential hatch will be destroyed before the new crop is safely on the wing, next fall. A big percentage will be destroyed by fire!

Spring fires blast myriads of birds' nests—and countless early broods. This vast destruction can be almost completely avoided—by burning stubble fields and haylands before April 20.

Ducks start to nest from about April 20. Prairie Chicken and Hungarian Partridge nest along in May; so do many of the insect-eating, ground-nesting birds.

These birds consume thousands of bushels of grasshoppers—and other insect pests. Birds are traditional friends of all farm communities. On farms and neighborhoods, where stubble and haylands are burned before April 20, birds increase with astonishing rapidity. Lands that are to be summer-fallowed should be burned over before April 20. This discourages birds from nesting on fields which are to be ploughed at the time eggs or young are in the nests.

This controlled burning has proved its value. It is a basic practice in wildlife management—to put millions more birds on the wing and check insect pests. Thousands of farmers cooperate in this wildlife restoration work across the Canadian West. Their experience is that, where everyone burns stubble and haylands early in the spring, birds again become abundant. (Incidentally, hay crops are improved, too.)

Wildlife is a crop which thrives under wise management. Birds are valued cooperators with farmers in the fight to control grasshoppers and like pests. Burning stubble and haylands before April 20 means more birds and fewer hopper pests!

The British people have been warned that they will not be able to resume a diet of plentiful meat and dairy products before 1950. Fresh eggs and tomatoes will not be off the rationed list before 1949 and strawberries will not be available in large quantities before 1948. The warning was given by Colonel J. J. Llewelyn, a British food minister.

KEEP HENS AND HOGS APART

Two government officials who recently visited the Peace River district, one a poultryman, the other a veterinarian, stressed the importance of keeping chickens and hogs separated. Hogs are peculiarly susceptible to the poultry type of tuberculosis and where infected birds are allowed access to the hog pens they may die there be eaten by the pigs and the hogs themselves be infected. Carcass parts so infected are condemned at the packing plants. Similarily, hogs should be confined to their own quarters and not allowed to roost in the chicken runs or in the chicken house. Some time ago a farmer in Central Alberta began having his hogs condemned for tuberculosis at the packing plant in Edmonton. In nearly every shipment some carcasses were condemned. Investigation revealed that the fattening pigs which were running at large had access to an old shed where a number of chickens had crawled away to die. Tests revealed that the chickens were infected with tuberculosis. The hogs were immediately penned up and since that time this man has had no further shipments condemned for tuberculosis. Prevention should be practised at all times. —C. H. Anderson, Beaverlodge.

RAILWAY HOSPITAL CAR HAS COMFORT FEATURES

Montreal, March 13—To add to the comfort of Canadian army casualties returning from overseas war zones, the Canadian National Railway mechanical department has been authorized by the Department of National Defence to build another hospital car. When completed this will be the fourth "hospital on wheels" to be turned out from the shops of the Canadian National Railways and placed in service since the start of the war. This car, of the latest design, will be air-conditioned and will embody all improvements developed for previous hospital cars. The necessary materials have been ordered and work commenced. It is anticipated that the Canadian National car shops at Point St. Charles will complete the car in a few weeks.

OUTDOOR WRITERS ENJOY CANADIAN BEAVER DINNER

Montreal, March 12—When the Outdoor Writers' Association recently met at Cleveland, Ohio, Canadian Beaver was featured as the main item on the dinner menu, with the added delicacy of beaver tail. Ernest G. (Ernie) Poole, sportsmen's representative of the Canadian National Railways, a guest, reported that the writers thoroughly enjoyed the meat course. Mr. Poole said the beaver was browned to perfection and served with bread dressing and green peas, and is authority for the expert statement that properly prepared beaver compares with the breast of pheasant from the standpoint of flavor and edibility.

DISTRICT AGRICULTURISTS

On the Home Front too...
EVERY ONE HAS A JOB TO DO

When a gun goes into action every man has a job to do. Seconds count, and team work gets results.

Training . . . endless training . . . gets efficiency that makes each man part of a perfect machine.

But something more than efficiency is needed to make a top-rank fighting unit. There must be loyalty . . . that spirit of responsibility that each man feels toward his mates.

We've got efficiency on the farm front . . . we're producing more, and with less help to do it. Keep up the teamwork that will make each one of us go all out to support our men on the fighting fronts.

We too, are part of a fighting unit . . . citizens of a nation at war. We must not let our men on the fighting fronts down.

Invasion means high tension on the fighting fronts . . . combined operations . . . thorough team work in every detail. And that call for greater action comes back to us at home. We have a job to do here, too. We must all buy Victory Bonds. We have a responsibility to our mates on the firing line. We can't let them down.

And the job that we are asked to do is . . . save more, and lend more to our country. We are asked to let our country have the use of money that we do not need now. We will have the money later on to improve our farms and to buy stock and equipment; for new barns and silos; for new furnishings and conveniences for our homes.

Be ready to buy more Victory Bonds.

DAY DREAMING—

ONE OF THE MOST POPULAR indoor sports at present is "Post War Planning." All the way down from noted economists whose work is to appraise, calculate and balance economics with human aspirations and endeavor, to the day laborer whose privilege it is to work hard and take what ever there is handed to him at the end of the day, men, and women too, are formulating plans for a post war economy. Out of it all of course, some good is bound to come. So much thought and effort could hardly be directed at a problem without some beneficial results. At the same time we fear that much of the thought and effort can be classed as mere day dreaming, that many of our ideas can be classed as the wishful kind and that by neither experience, training or influence, are many of us capable of adding very much to the fund of human knowledge. This is not to be taken that people should not read, think, or act, they certainly should, but in doing so, even if their heads are among the clouds, their feet should still be on the ground. Yet out of dreams reality grows. Perhaps this is one of the reasons why human progress through legislation comes so slowly. An idea revolutionary in nature, emerging from the mind of one man may be received with ridicule and disrespect, yet many years after become incorporated in the life of the nation.

Just now at Ottawa legislation is being prepared as regards health insurance. By the provisions of the Act and by the payment of a yearly fee, when the Act becomes law, all people will be assured of medical attention and hospitalization. It is not an easy bill to draft, there are many interests involved, but to say the very least we believe it will meet with the approval of the people. Certainly it will banish the haunting spectre of illness from many homes and for those who are fortunate enough not to require a doctor or hospitalization, the annual fee is not a crippling payment.

Another piece of legislation designed to help the Canadian people concerns a new bank. The bill covering this has already had its second reading in the Ottawa house. It is proposed that the new bank will fill a need not catered to by the present banks and is not intended to supplant them or even seriously compete with them. The bank which will be a subsidiary of the Bank of Canada, is supposed to prepare the way for a high level of employment after the war, it will start with a capital of $25,000,000 with power to borrow more if needed. There is considerable criticism of the bill and at present it is being studied by the Banking and Commerce Committee of the House. The object seems to be to assist small businesses so that employment may be created.

IMPORTED PACKAGE BEES TO BE SUBSIDIZED

The Alberta Beekeepers' Association has received information from the Canadian Beekeepers' Council that the Dominion Government will be making a subsidy payment on purchases of package bees. Details concerning the amount to be paid are not yet available.

The subsidy will go to the honey producer. This action should help the industry in Alberta greatly. About 20 per cent of the 45,000 hives are established from these packages, states W. G. le Maistre, Provincial Apiarist. Prior to this announcement concern was being felt because the high price to which bees had risen since the start of the war had curtailed orders. It was known, that, with honey prices fixed by Wartime Prices and Trade Board order, many who in the past produced surplus honey for sale would only set out hives enough to provide honey for their own use this year because of these high prices.

Reports concerning supplies of package bees indicate that associations and dealers are able to obtain sufficient for all demands. Beekeepers who have delayed placing their orders can still have them filled.

Bee breeders in the States where these packages are obtained, have acknowledged Alberta bookings and expect to begin shipments about April 1st.

THE MEAT SITUATION

Meat rationing has been temporarily suspended in Canada because of the fact that over 100 million pounds of meat are in cold storage and cattle deliveries are running at the rate of from 50 to 60 per cent above that of a year ago. Then there is the all-time record run of hogs to market and the shortage of ocean shipping.

Hon. T. G. Taggart, chairman of the Wartime Meat Board, in delivering an address at Lethbridge predicted the livestock glut in Canada will soon be over. He said if shipping were available Britain could take all the surplus. —Wheat Pool Bulletin.

PREPARATIONS FOR SEEDING

Wise farmers are now making preparations for seeding. Is the grain to be used as seed of good germination? Some of it we know is not. Farmers would do well to make a home germination test of 100 kernels of the different lots of seed they intend to sow.

Grains must be treated against stinking smut or bunt. Treating with mercurial dusts—Ceresan or Leytosan—is the modern method. Its advantage is that the seed can be treated and stored for several weeks before seeding, so that actual sowing operations are not interrupted.

Repair parts for machinery are scarce. A wise farmer will look over his machinery and order repair parts as quickly as possible.

In many districts plans should be made to combat saw flies. One drill width of wheat sown very early around an infected field will trap saw flies, then the strip can be destroyed and so the grubs killed, about the middle of July.

If fields are badly infested, one recommendation is to sow oats, barley and flax first and delay the seeding of wheat as long as possible. Where the saw fly infestation is 100 per cent, it is recommended if possible to skip a year in the sowing of wheat.

LABOUR SAVING TIPS

Experimental work in agricultural engineering by the Engineering Division of the Field Husbandry Division, Dominion Experimental Farms Service, demonstrated that in the handling of hay a one-man rack saved labour in loading from a hay loader and that one man could do the work of two men in building a load of legume silage when that type of rack was used. To allow a tractor to draw a horse-type mower, a safety release and lifting device was devised for the mower, making it possible for one man to operate both the tractor and mower. Plans for a pole stacker have been distributed by the Division to farmers.

WEANING THE LITTER

(Experimental Farms News)

Weaning time is a critical period in the life of a young pig and is accompanied by danger of a severe setback unless the pig is prepared for this sudden change. A pig's digestive system develops slowly, and cannot handle large amounts of solid feed. For this reason it is not advisable to take the young pigs away from the sow before they are eight weeks [illegible] and if the sow is not too [illegible] if only one litter a year is to be raised, it will prove profitable to leave the pigs on the sow until they are ten weeks old, says J. A. Bennett, Dominion Experimental Station, Swift Current, Sask.

Some farmers wean their pigs at six weeks of age or younger, but this is a dangerous practice and results in many stunted pigs unless very special feeds are used. Two litters per year can still be raised on a sow when the pigs are not weaned before eight weeks of age provided the sow is given the best of care.

In order that the pigs growth will continue without interruption at weaning it is necessary to have the pigs eating considerable quantities of meal before they are weaned. This requires creep feeding while they are still with the sow. A corner of the pen can be boarded off to serve as a creep. A suitable meal mixture should be made available to the pigs in the creep as soon as they have an interest in feed which is usually when they are from two to three weeks of age. It is important that the feed be palatable and low in fibre. Ground oats with the hulls removed are unequalled as a feed for young pigs. Shorts and middlings are also good. Because the pig is growing rapidly large amounts of protein are required. Sweet skim milk is excellent as a protein and should be fed as soon as the pigs will take it. It is not advisable, however, to feed sour milk or buttermilk to pigs before they are four weeks old as digestive disturbances and scouring may result. If milk products are not available a commercial protein supplement should be used. This supplement should make up five per cent of the meal mixture of the very young pig and the proportion of supplement increased until it makes up from 10 to 15 per cent of the meal mixture, depending upon the protein content of the supplement, when the pigs are eight weeks old.

A little extra care in the feeding and management of the litter at weaning time will be amply repaid in thriftier pigs that will require fewer pounds of feed to grow to market weight.

WINTER ON THE SANGRO

From Italy by Tpr. Baumgartner

When its winter on the Sangro,
And you're ankle-deep in mud,
When the wind blows down your pup-tent
With a lull and sodden thud,
Once again I'll mutter loudly,
That I'd sooner be in h—
As the rain soaks through my blankets
And my muddy clothes as well

One dark night upon the Sangro,
Spring was rustling in the air,
As I crawled beneath my pup-tent,
For some "Vino" that was there
I was bitten, blotched and bewildered,
And a chilling filled my blood,
When I landed in the middle
Of a sticky pool of mud.

So please take your muddy Sangro,
Quite frankly I don't care—
Cause I'll trade the whole of Italy
And an extra six months pay,
For a week-end with my dear friends
In the rockies far away

IN these decisive months all Canada's effort is concentrated on one great objective—the attack that is to destroy the Nazi menace and all that it represents. Years of work have gone into its preparation. The best of our young men are staking their lives on its success.

We in Canada must support and strengthen this attack with all our effort. This one purpose must command our work, our minds and our hearts.

We must not permit any scramble for private gain or individual selfish ends, to distract us from our main task. If we concentrate on seeking, individually or jointly, higher prices, higher pay or higher profits, we shall be diverting our attention from the main task at this critical time. We shall also endanger the stability of prices which we in Canada have achieved after great difficulties—a stability that is essential to efficiency and fairness in war, and to peacetime prosperity afterward.

Our young men are fighting for a Canada and a world in which all men can have faith, hope and security. Each of them wants to come back to a job—or a farm—with a future. We at home must keep secure for them a strong and stable foundation on which alone a post-war period of promise and achievement can be built.

This advertisement is one of a series being issued by the Government of Canada to emphasize the importance of preventing further increases in the cost of living now and deflation later

THE COAL SITUATION

At the commencement of this winter fuel authorities were really concerned regarding the comfort of the Canadian public and wide spread advice was given as regards saving fuel.

The winter being an exceptionally mild one for Canada, relieved the fuel situation considerably, and by working steadily by January 1, 1944, for the first time in 20 months, all domestic mines were fully caught up with back orders

Now there is a request that those who can do so purchase fuel now for next winter's needs. It is not likely that two exceptionally mild winters will follow each other and with a normal winter's demand the mines find difficulty in supplying all the coal that is called for, if everyone waits until coal is needed before ordering. Moreover in order to keep men steadily employed some coal for next winter should be purchased now

A New Bulletin

Line Elevators Farm Service have the enviable distinction of having published the first Canadian bulletin devoted entirely to the problem of water erosion of soils. This was Bulletin No. 1. In less than three years, 50,000 copies were distributed. It has now been out of print for about a year. The urgency of the problem is fully recognized in government circles and several Dominion Experimental Stations have, for some years, been conducting experiments on control method.

Bulletin No. 1 was concerned, chiefly, with drawing public attention to the problem itself and very little space was devoted to control.

Bulletin No. 4 is now ready for distribution. It is entitled "Water Erosion of Soils in the Prairie Provinces and Its Control." Mr. L. B. Thomson, Superintendent, Dominion Experimental Station, Swift Current, and his staff, have offered invaluable advice and assistance in the preparation of [illegible] manner; [illegible] benefited immeasurably from criticisms and suggestions made by Professor John Mitchell, University of Saskatchewan, [illegible] Albright, Dominion Experimental Station, Beaverlodge and Mr. [illegible] Dominion Experimental Farm, Brandon.

The information published is therefore, authoritative. Farmers, country school teachers and their students may secure copies through Line Elevator agents or by writing directly to Line Elevators Farm Service, Grain Exchange Building, Winnipeg, or Herald Building, Calgary.

Rural Life In A Peaceful World

(Published by Request)

The growth of the cooperative movement in the agriculture industry has been exceptionally strong. This is a heartening sign in view of the general breakdown of the social organism. Cooperatives take the middle road between excessive individualism on the one hand and collectivist statism on the other. Organized on a democratic basis and controlled by democratic methods they are among democracy's best defenses

The Conference recognizes that cooperatives are organized primarily to achieve economic purposes. Through them the farmer hopes to find better markets for his products, obtain fairer prices, make loans on more reasonable terms, buy to better advantage for farm and home, produce better quality commodities and in general achieve the benefits of collective action. By forming buying, selling and credit cooperatives, the farmer puts himself into the position where he can exercise powerful economic leverage in an organized market. Through them he aims to obtain a more adequate return for his labor and his investment.

But, in addition to such economic benefits, the Conference sees in well-formed and well operated cooperatives great social, educational, and moral advantages. Cooperatives furnish a wholesome outlet for man's social nature which craves the society of others; they check unwholesome and selfish individualism, in clutches of which farmers were caught all too often in the past. Furthermore, cooperatives have done much for adult education through folk schools, discussion clubs, reading circles, extension courses, and the distribution of good literature. Cooperatives, rightly conducted become valuable agencies for inculcating important social virtues, such as fairness, honesty, helpfulness and benevolence Cooperatives will not be successful unless the members are imbued with the spirit of cooperation Cooperatives will not be successful without a sustained understanding interest of the members Local control is essential for the success of cooperatives.

Because of the many benefits that grow out of good cooperatives, the Conference reaffirms its conviction stated in its Manifesto on Rural Life: "Farm cooperatives are necessary. Were it not for cooperative enterprise, the family-type farmer would be at the mercy of the economically powerful society Unorganized he would find himself pitted as an individual against the organized forces of concentrated wealth. The farmer cannot allow himself to become a slave either of a domineering state or of the economic dictatorship of the mighty of this earth. The farmer will be free only insofar as he is organized."

The Conference finds it necessary to warn the farmer against those who would introduce the spirit of sordid gain into the cooperative movement Once the spirit of materialism brings its evil cohorts of selfishness, avarice and greed into the cooperative movement, it will be rushed on by them to certain ruin. Nor must cooperatives allow their organization to be used to play power politics to the harm of other cooperatives, the consuming public, or the common good.

With experienced cooperators, the Conference is unalterably opposed to the placing of well-established cooperatives under the administration of agencies of the government. Cooperatives cannot thrive in an atmosphere of bureaucracy Collective statism, in its purposes and its functions, is foreign to the collective action of voluntary and independent cooperators

Considered a letter from Tofield School District No. 1930, in which they advised that they could not see their way clear to reduce 1944 requisition.

Sold lot number 16, Block 12, Plan 9900S to Ole F. Hagen at $25.00.

Leased pasture located west of Barden house to W. G. Morden, at rental of $5.00 for current season.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Duncan of Ross Creek are moving to the Herman Tiedemann farm.

Walter Katen is enjoying an 8-day leave at home. He will return to Edmonton Manning Depot on Easter Sunday.

Luella Wood spent several days at home last week—a nice change after being in isolation almost all March with scarlet fever.

The Lakeshore War Workers' Club met at Mrs Englenham's last Thursday. The members decided that it would be easier and more interesting if each wrote to the same boy overseas each month instead of a different one, and that each member would be responsible for parcels to that boy also. A motion was passed that members send parcels to the boys during April, as none have been sent since last fall As road and weather conditions had prevented holding the dance and bridge drive, it was decided to collect one dollar donation from each member to provide funds to carry on our work for the present.

M.D. Of Beaver Sets Municipal, School and Hospital Mill Rate

ADJOURNED SPECIAL MEETING DEALS WITH 1944 ESTIMATES

After much consideration and discussion the municipal mill rate for the M.D. of Beaver for the year 1943 was set at 15 mills and school district mill rates were set at various amounts according to their requisitions

The adjourned special meeting was held at the District's office at Ryley on Friday, March 30th, there being present, Reeve Anderson; Councillors Giebelhaus, Logan, Lucas, Moen, Ovens and Swabey.

The minutes of the preceding meeting were read and adopted

The social service tax came under consideration and a letter was read from the Department of Municipal Affairs concerning this. Apparently the mill rate for the social service tax is fixed by the Dept. at three mills There are however some arrears to be paid and taking these into account three mills would hardly cover the government's requisition. It was decided to give further consideration to this at the next meeting.

The estimates for the Viking Municipal Hospital were considered, and the mill rate set at two and a half mills 1943 figures were. Assessment $1,348,401 00; requisition $3,170.00; tax rate 2 mills; levy $2945 56; collections $3239 01; percentage of total taxes collected 28

The requisition and mill rate of each school division was then taken up one by one and the following mill rates were set:

Clover Bar 15; Holden 16; Lamont 17; Vegreville 16; Camrose 15.

A bylaw covering the above mill rates was given its first, second and third reading

A bylaw covering the Viking hospital mill rate was given the necessary three readings.

MUNICIPAL RATE 15 MILLS

To arrive at a proper municipal mill rate all the expenditures of 1943 had to be considered The secretary had prepared a statement of last year's actual expenditure and an estimated expenditure for the same item this year. These items were gone over one by one most of them being accepted, only a few of them being altered and of those some were increased, others decreased. The total estimated expenditure for 1944 was $106,117.70, and on this basis a mill rate of 15 mills was struck.

Regarding the taxing of business within the area of the M.D., last year a personal property and stock in trade assessment was made and no business tax levied The same policy will be followed this year and a bylaw covering this was given three readings.

A bylaw covering the Minimum tax and educational tax was also passed. This means that wage earners within the M D. whose names are not on the assessment roll pay four dollars for each tax.

ASKED FOR COMPENSATION

Mr. Annebo interviewed Council saying that he had rented a quarter section from the M.D. last year with a granary upon it. When he threshed he expected the granary to be empty but it contained M.D. grain brought in from another quarter. Consequently he had to improvise an out door granary of sheaves and straw in consequence of which a quantity of his grain was damaged. He asked for some compensation. Councillor Moen who was acquainted with the circumstances was given authority to settle with Mr. Annebo.

TO BUY CARRYMORE LETOURNEAU

Councillor Giebelhaus announced that there was now in Edmonton, ready for delivery, the Carrymore Letourneau ordered by the M.D. recently He said the M.D. would need a caterpillar to haul it and he believed a suitable second hand one could be obtained. He would like to see the complete unit purchased and that it become a municipal unit rather than a divisional one.

Reeve Anderson thought that some policy as to buying, paying and using it should be laid down.

Moved by Councillor Giebelhaus that now Letourneau be a municipal unit rather than on a divisional basis and that we order a cat with Letourneau.. Carried.

The approximate cost of the Letourneau is $7000.00 and the caterpillar $6000.00

Councillor Lucas said he would like two 10 ft. horse maintainers for his division. It appeared that Councillor Swabey had some of these and the two councillors will get together.

Messrs. Dorin and Benson interviewed Council regarding the purchase of E half of 27-49-14. A written application was also on file. On the motion of Councillor Ovens application was tabled until councillor concerned inspect the land and report.

HERD LAW?

Councillor Ovens gave notice of motion to be made at next meeting regarding herd law.

Meeting adjourned.

A WEEKLY EDITOR LOOKS AT Ottawa

Written specially for the weekly newspapers of Canada

By JIM GREENBLAT

All this talk about Ottawa being a "girl-town" seems to be ocular misconception. The whole nation will probably be astounded, as was the writer, to learn from latest figures of the Bureau of Statistics that Ottawa has 72,000 males, 82,351 females. But you wouldn't think so by a street glance. Of the total 31,500 were shown as English origin, 22,847 Irish, 19,520 of Scottish extraction and 48,061 French. Eskimos and Indians resident in Ottawa number 41.

An amazing record. The Minister of Munitions and Supply, Mr. Howe, told the House of Commons that since the beginning of the war, contracts awarded by the department soared $9,500 millions, and that 800,000 workers are engaged in actual production of war equipment with another 200,000 in subsidiary work. A breakdown of some of this makes astonishing reading. Canada produced, for instance, 4121 aircraft last year as well as 15,500 armored vehicles. We made 45,000 artillery gun barrels, carriages and mountings in 1943 and will exceed the 1943 total of 580,000 machine guns, rifles, etc. We produced 90 million rounds of gun ammunition and 1.5 billion rounds of small arm stuff. In addition our workers built 150 cargo vessels and 180 naval vessels and delivered 2,000 small craft out of 4,300 orders placed. This is only part of the picture because there was a tremendous amount of defence construction and other projects, too.

Subsidies for canning crops will be continued this year, it is announced. Tomatoes get the most attention with $6 a ton subsidy for producers selling to processors—an increase of $3 over 1943. The subsidy of $4 remains unchanged for corn; peas $10 shelled weight or $2 straw weight; green and wax beans $7.50 a ton. The government is continuing these subsidies in the fear that other crops requiring less labour might be substituted.

This fear was born out by the fact that production of tomatoes, corn, peas and beans declined last year.

There has been quite a change in the regulations for Spring seeding and harvest leave granted army personnel, such leave now being extended from six weeks to two months. An interesting factor is that restrictions have been eliminated on the number who may be granted agricultural leave. Last year there was a limit of five per cent from any particular unit. This year only those who are deemed essential, cannot go. Applications for leave must come from the soldiers themselves, and they must pay their own transportation.

Five Canadian artists have been overseas placing on canvas for future generations, the life of Canada's sons in World War II. First results have been included in a recent exhibition of war art at the National Gallery in London, England. From time to time the finished paintings will be shown across the Dominion, eventually to form a national collection which will surely be reflected in the murals of Canadian public buildings. The artists even shared the life of operational stations, went on coastal patrols, to get "the feel" for the canvasses.

At various times farmers have protested daylight saving as a permanent wartime measure. A survey by the Power Controller of Canada brought the information that for the Maritimes cancellation would mean an estimated 10 per cent increased power demand, undesirable at present; Quebec's power in metropolitan areas would jump 60,000 H.P. which couldn't be taken care of by present generating capacity; Ontario would see demand rocketed by 75,000 H.P. while British Columbia generating stations are already overloaded. Only the prairie provinces report sufficient capacity to carry increased demand.

Last year saw a record movement of capital to Canada from sale of outstanding securities to other countries, the Bureau of Statistics show, in all a total of $172 million. There has been a heavy demand for Canadian bonds in United States markets, net sales in 1943 being $150,000,000 compared with $19,000,000 in 1941.

TO EXPAND WORK OF SCHOOL PATROLS

Sponsored by the Alberta Motor Association, school patrols have been doing good work in different parts of the province. Doubtless the reduction of 500 in the number of motor vehicle accidents in Alberta last year were to some degree due to the work of these vigilant patrols.

Extension of the work was planned when a meeting of the Edmonton branch of the A.M.A. and school principals was held recently. The capital city now has patrols organized in 20 schools, and 120 boys and girls now comprise the personnel of the patrols.

Full co-operation of the city police is given and directions are issued concerning the proper functioning of the patrols, whose first duty is to see that groups of children cross the intersections near schools without accident.

Other parts of the province also have increased interest in patrol work. School authorities have stated that it is expected the work will be expanded this year, in view of the splendid results obtained at centres that have adopted the system.

Since price control was adopted in Canada the cost of living has advanced a little more than 8 per cent, as against 33 per cent during the corresponding period of the Great War.

OLD FURS WANTED

"The Northern Alberta Division of the Navy League of Canada is again appealing to the Public for gifts of furs, or old fur coats to be made into vests for Canada's Merchant Marine and the Canadian Naval Forces. Three Thousand Five Hundred and Thirty Seven of these were distributed during 1943. Let your old furs go to War! They have a job to do. RAILWAYS • STEAMSHIPS • AIRLINES • HOTELS • TELEGRAPHS • EXPRESS — CANADIAN NATIONAL

TRANSPORT for a NATION AT WAR

SINCE THE CALL TO ARMS

WITHIN AN HOUR of the opening of hostilities the Canadian National began what has proved to be the largest and one of the most exacting war jobs in Canada. This job has continued day and night without stop for four and a half years.

FROM SEPTEMBER 10, 1939 to March 10, 1944 the Canadian National carried more than 100 million passengers and 300 million tons of freight. Since the beginning of the war the Canadian National Dining Car Department has served 13,631,287 meals.

THE RAILWAY not only hauled away the completed munitions of war, but brought in the raw materials to make them. Without this two-way service, Canada's magnificent job of production could not have been carried out. The Canadian National itself builds mine-sweepers, 12,000-ton freighters, naval guns and gun mountings, aircraft components, and parts for other gun factories.

OF THE 100 MILLION PASSENGERS carried, a high percentage consisted of members of the armed forces proceeding to camps for training and to shipboard for embarkation.

STEAMSHIPS OF THE COMPANY, though reduced in numbers by sinkings through enemy action, have served gallantly in the war as auxiliary armed cruisers, hospital ships and transports.

CANADIAN NATIONAL Express and Telegraph facilities have worked to capacity to meet war demands.

The Canadian National's nine all-year hotels, situated in cities from the Atlantic to the Pacific, have provided service of an essential nature to those engaged in the war effort. All the Company's resort hotels are closed for the duration.

20% OF THE PERSONNEL in Company's service in 1939 have joined the armed forces. In Victory Loan campaigns Canadian National men and women have purchased bonds to the amount of $36,934,600.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES, subsidiary of the Canadian National Railways, has carried 435,000 passengers during the war, 9,417,000 pounds of air mail letters, and 1,478,000 pounds of wartime air express. Trans-Canada Air Lines is also flying the Atlantic regularly with mail to and from the armed forces.

The Canadian National has been privileged to join with all the citizens of our country, including those who are serving in the armed forces, in the prosecution of the war. It believes that Canadians will be interested in this outline of some of the System's war activities.

Extracts from Annual Report of the Directors of the Canadian National System:

OUR OBJECTIVE IN 1943, as in other war years, was to place the full strength of our manpower and facilities behind the war effort of the United Nations. To this end all energies have been directed. The requirements of the armed forces, of industry and agriculture, for transport and other services, have been met in all of the nine Provinces of the Dominion and in the important sections of the United States in which we operate.

RECORD TRAFFIC

These demands were greater than ever before, the traffic moved in 1943 being 17.3% greater than in 1942, the previous peak war year, and 44.7% greater than in 1928, the peak peace year.

Freight traffic in 1943 was more than double that of 1939, and passenger traffic four times that of 1939.

Despite this, the very large movements of war materials and personnel reached their destinations in accordance with schedule arrangements. There was no lowering of the recognized standards of safety.

MANUFACTURE OF MUNITIONS

The Company also extended its activities as a manufacturer of munitions, ships and naval equipment.

EARNING POWER

The 1943 operations demonstrated the great earning power of the System, the railway proving again that it can handle an immense volume of business economically as well as expeditiously.

After providing from revenue for all operating expenses (including deferred maintenance, depreciation, amortization of defence projects and reserve for inventories) and also a reserve for pension contracts, taxes, interest on funded debt and Government loans, the surplus paid in cash to the Government was $36,439,412.

OPERATING EFFICIENCY

The operating ratio for the year was 73.64% (an all-time record) as compared with 76.93% in 1942 and 81.99% in the peak peace year of 1928.

It is interesting to note that the vastly increased war traffic in 1943 was handled with 16.6% fewer locomotives, 15.4% fewer freight cars and 8.1% more passenger cars than was the traffic of 1917, the fourth year of the last World War.

SPECIAL SERVICES PROVIDED

The Company was honoured in being selected to provide extensive train and other services for Prime Minister Churchill, President Roosevelt and Madam Chiang Kai-shek during their visits to Canada in 1943.

POST-WAR

Changing conditions will call for new methods of railway operation and new types of service, and there must needs be a continuing search for improvement in all aspects of the railway industry. In view of this, the Company has in hand a programme of research. This programme, in addition to considering ways and means of improving service and efficiency of operation, also encompasses the problems of post-war reconstruction and rehabilitation.

THE OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES in all departments of the System have worked hard and loyally to cope with increased responsibilities arising out of the war, and the directors record their appreciation and thanks. The traditional harmonious relations between management and employees were maintained throughout the year. Appreciation also is expressed to shippers and the travelling public alike for their cooperation in and sympathetic understanding of difficult operating conditions caused by the war.

HOW CAN YOU BE SO STUPID?—

ONLY A FEW DAYS AGO a store in a large city in the United States advertised fifteen hundred alarm clocks for sale. There was a near riot and according to reports the whole fifteen hundred were sold in three hours. While one clerk took the money, another swiftly tossed the boxed clock, unwrapped, to the purchaser. The buying and selling only ceased when there were no more clocks. Had there been more we presume the selling would have continued until the buying market had reached the saturation point.

Reading the report of this incident brought to mind another clock incident which is reported to have happened several centuries ago in one of the cities of southern central Europe. A man of exceptional mechanical talents had constructed a wonderful clock. It was so wonderful according to the age in which it was made, that the people of the country in which the clock was made decided that they alone were to be benefitted by its marvelous mechanism. So to prevent the man from making another similar clock for another country, they placed him in prison and kept him there. In due course the clock needed attention and by that time the man either by weakness or death, was unable to repair it. The story sounds crazy and the telling isn't so good, but basically it is true and is one of the many prize instances on record of human crass stupidity.

While World War number two is being fought out on land, sea and in the air, somewhere brilliant minds are endeavoring to work out a lasting peace arrangement, and it will depend to a large extent upon the kind of peace that is made, how lasting it will be. It is sincerely hoped that when the signal for peace is given, grudges created by the present war and past wars may be forgotten. Antagonism created by historical events have been keeping nations apart in Europe for centuries and it does seem folly to bring children into a world of fury, hate and suspicion, a condition wholly conducive to war and wholesale slaughter. It is not to be expected that children bereaved of parents or parents bereaved of children are going to remember with any degree of goodwill the name of the country which brought about the bereavement, human nature persists regardless of the aspirations of the idealist. What perhaps would help, apart from the actual peace treaty, would be an understanding between history book writers. A well known United States educator is reported to have recently said:

> "After pondering the problem for many years, I have come to the conclusion that the greatest possible contribution to world peace would be a history book written from a strictly international and disinterested point of view."
> The educator added that he had read accounts of the battle of Waterloo in British, French, Belgian, and German school books and found that the only points on which they agreed were the scene of the battle and the fact that Napoleon was defeated."

One could go further and recall that while the war of 1812 is quite well emphasized in American school text books, in British school text books it is hardly mentioned.

The world is large. Upon its surface, according to geographical location and climatic conditions, every kind of food required by man may be grown. In the sea and under the earth untold riches may be found. The harvest of the sea needs no elaboration, and from the bowels of the earth come fuel for warmth and gems for beauty. The United Nations are now fighting the forces of tyranny and aggression, but when this war is won by the big four, Britain, the United States, Russia and China, and peace and understanding follow strife and bloodshed, it is to be hoped that the well being of all men everywhere will be considered. Let us hope the peace arrangement will be more like the clock sale, where all and sundry could buy clocks as long as they lasted, rather than like the citizens who thought their interests were best served by preventing the outside world from enjoying the benefits of their skill, only to be left holding the bag. How could they have been so stupid?

Lord's Day Observance

Does it mean a thing to you—Sabbath observance?

Here in Sunny Alberta we are singularly blessed with many and varied blessings. Most of us have food, clothing and a place we call home—be it rich or poor. All of us enjoy safety from war, bombs, and suffering. All of us have freedom of worship. Surely we are thankful!

But do we always show our appreciation of these things? Most often we merely accept them as our due, even complain because of some fancied hardships.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union works through many departments, one of which is the Lord's Day Observance department, which tries in all countries throughout the world to awaken more concern over the proper keeping of the Sabbath.

Surely our many blessings should be an urge to us all to give whatever help we can towards making Sunday more sacred and holy in our own province, especially in our own town or community.

Because of the confusion which exists in the minds of most people regarding the Lord's Day Alliance, I would like to call your attention to the following:

"The Lord's Day Alliance of Canada is a national and inter-denominational organization which was begun in Ottawa in April, 1888 for the protection and preservation of the Lord's Day. Official action by Anglican, Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian churches started the movement which was quickly adopted by many other denominations.

"The primary task of the Alliance is to safeguard Sunday as a national weekly day of rest. It seeks to secure for the citizens of Canada this one day of the week free from the ordinary toil of life, and for our community's freedom from the atmosphere of commercialism on that day. It seeks also to promote an intelligent appreciation of the essential spiritual values of this day of freedom through the cultivation of moral and spiritual ideals.

"The Lord's Day Act of Canada, passed 1906, gave Canadians their legal right to Sunday as their weekly day of rest. All unnecessary work and business is declared illegal on that day. Where necessary, Sunday work must be provided for, the Act aims to secure compensatory rest-day privileges for Sunday workers. The Alliance has resisted attempts to exploit Sunday for the business of sport and entertainment. It does not prosecute offenders but seeks to promote an intelligent understanding of Sunday laws and their enforcement."
—Quoted from "Why and How."

Elmer Helms who wrote "The Lost Day", points out that "our days are prolonged by obeying the law of the Sabbath. If we defy it we destroy ourselves before our time. Man's physical well-being depends on the Sabbath. His spiritual being far more so. The high and holy purpose of Sunday is to walk and talk with the Lord."

I wish to urge every pastor of every denomination to devote some time to emphasizing Lord's Day Observance in Alberta, especially on the first Sunday in April on which the W.C.T.U. calendar is the day set aside for this specific purpose. If that Sunday cannot be conveniently used, take some other Sunday, but do not neglect to bring this matter before your people.

Mrs. G. Hendrickson,
Provincial superintendent Lord's Day Observance.

MONEY SAVER

A Missouri cattle feeder tells this story about his grandfather to prove a point that times have changed and that we have softened up a bit.

"In the early days before there was a recognized livestock market, grandfather used to drive his cattle 20 miles to the nearest rail point and sell them in St. Louis. One winter he took a large shipment to St. Louis and pocketed some $7,500 in cash from the sale. In those days, it took quite a sizeable shipment of cattle to add up to that amount of money. Returning by rail, he reached the shipping point 20 miles from home and went to a livery stable to hire someone to drive him to the farm. Money was dear then, and men would work for 35c a day. Grandfather asked the liveryman what he would charge for the trip, and was informed the fee would be 75c. With $7,500 in his vest pocket, grandfather shook his head. 'Seventy-five cents? That's two days' work and I can walk it in one day!' was his classic reply. And walk it he did." — Northwestern Miller

NAMES MAKE SAD NEWS*

● The names in this newspaper that interest you most are names of boys you know who are on active service . . . boys from this community. You used to read their names in school reports, in church and Sunday school items, in news of sport. You read these names today in news from the fighting fronts. So often now these names make sad news.

Let's do all we can to hasten the day when our newspapers can tell of happy things.

Yes, we can do something to hasten that glad day.

When we do this job we help to win victory sooner. We help to end the war sooner. And we do something to benefit ourselves.

The job that we are asked to do is to save our money and lend it to our country.

As each new fighting front is opened more money is needed. More people must be ready to furnish this money.

More Victory Bonds will be issued. Those who have not bought Victory Bonds before must buy them. Those who have bought bonds must buy more. We are not asked to give . . . we are just asked to lend. We will have money for things we plan to do, after the war.

Dedicate yourself to this war effort . . . something you can do . . . one thing you must do. Your help is urgently needed.

Mrs. C. Nashman underwent an operation in an Edmonton hospital one day last week. We wish her a speedy recovery.

Mr. and Mrs. Jason Henderson and sons were Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Mitchell.

A pleasant afternoon was spent at the Henry McGinitie home Wednesday afternoon of last week when Mrs. McGinitie entertained the Ladies' Aid. Members not present please take notice we are requested to piece a quilt block, 25 inches square, of print or broadcloth, crazy pattern, Red Cross. When pieced, if turned in to Mrs. Annie Lee she will sew them together and if possible the quilt will be tied at the May meeting to be held at the home of Mrs. Oscar Barnes.

Mr. Stinson, Mr. Harrison and Stanley Sears made a business trip to Edmonton Tuesday.

Tofield Community League

The meeting opened with sixteen members present. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and adopted as read. The Secretary read a letter from the Registrar of Companies, also produced the charter and by-laws stating the League is fully registered under the Societies act.

The Secretary read a report on the various activities of the league in the last month. The following are the amounts realized from these activities:

Minstrel Show at Kingman	$ 9.82
R. C. Ladies, Kingman	$ 5.00
Dance, March 17th	$ 19.40
Minstrel Show, Holden...	$ 27.24
Com. Auction Sale	$130.15
Dance, April 10th	$ 33.70

The Secretary was instructed to write the Dept. Agriculture re the League sponsoring the Farm Mechanics Short course.

Quite a lengthy discussion took place on the hospital question and reports were given by the Committees in the three meetings held so far and one of these with the minister of health in Edmonton.

The League discussed the possibility of helping to sponsor a Calf Show in Tofield put on by the MacKenzie Calf Club.

The next meeting of the league is on Wednesday, April 26, and will be a supper meeting under the arrangement of Committee: Bob McClyment, Father Schmeltzer and G. Allan.

The National Film Board pictures are scheduled to be shown at Tofield this coming Saturday, April 15th. The show will start at 8:00 p.m. and will include films entitled "The Nazis Strike," "Cape Cod Fishing" "Bushland Revels", "Murder in the Milk Can."

Arrangements have also been made to have on hand a film "War Department Report." This film will be shown if possible. It is a United States Army production and parts of it is captured film from the enemy. It is rated as a very strong film and is being shown in connection with the forthcoming Victory Loan campaign. There will be other films according to the time available and the generosity of the operator.

While perhaps the National Film Board Shows lack some of the story plot of the commercial films, they are genuinely educational and of much and varied interest.

A good attentive audience is requested and of course admission is free.

Mrs. L. Carlisle and Belva of Edmonton spent the holidays in Tofield.

Awarded Military Medal

It will be remembered that we recently announced the awarding of the Military Medal to Acting Sgt. George A. Campion, whose home is in the Ministik area. Through the courtesy of the Public Relations Office M.D. 13, we are pleased to publish the citation which accompanied the award.

CORPORAL (ACTING SERGEANT) G. A. CAMPION, M.M.

M 10666, Cpl. (A/Sgt.) George Alexander Campion, M.M.; On Dec. 22, 1943, "A" Company of a Canadian Infantry Regiment was attacking down the main street of Ortona, Italy, supported by a troop of tanks, when a mine field was spotted 20 yards in front of the leading tank. All the infantry were pinned inside buildings by heavy machine gun fire from four guns. Engineers were called forward to clear the field, but owing to this fire it was impossible for them to get near the mines.

Sgt. Campion asked permission of his company commander to lay a smoke screen. Permission was granted. He gathered a pocket full of smoke grenades from his platoon, ran 30 yards beyond the mine field into the open street and threw them. A perfect smoke screen resulted. He then ran back to his platoon to collect more grenades. In the meantime the Engineers, who had not been able to complete their task before the smoke cleared, were driven back by machine gun fire.

Returning, Sgt. Campion laid another smoke screen which enabled them to clear the mines and thus allowed the advance to go on.

The distance covered each time under heavy machine gun fire in the open street was approximately 30 yards.

Because of his determination and absolute lack of personal fear on these two occasions he contributed materially to the success of the operation.

MRS. FLAATEN VISITS COAST

To the Editor:

This winter I have been visiting at the coast around New Westminster, Vancouver, and Victoria. I spent most of my time with friends around New Westminster. Among those I know there are the Moen sisters from Bardo, Borghild, Mrs. L. Rolfstad; Thelma, Mrs. D. Mackie; Lorraine, Mrs. R. Berg; Gunhild, Mrs. H. Hendrickson; Mabel, Mrs. H. H. Shrewsbury. (She lives in Seattle but came to New Westminster for a visit while I was there.) I also met Benny Moen and his wife at Victoria. My headquarters was at Mr. and Mrs. Rolfstad's home at Strawberry Hill. I was a guest of Mr. and Mrs. R. Nordhus and also Mr. and Mrs. J. Westby. In Vancouver, my headquarters was at Mr. and Mrs. A. Stronstad's home from Ryley and I visited many I know who have moved from Ryley out there.

Among those I visited in Victoria were Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Ingram. As they are old timers from here we had a lot to say about the good old days. I also had a nice visit with Mr. and Mrs. Stokes. Mrs. Stokes is Mrs. P. B. Anderson's sister and was in Bardo before she was married. All the friends I visited had nice homes and seem to be getting along fine. There seems to be plenty of work and fairly good pay. I also attended two churches, one in Vancouver and one in Annaville. Both were Norwegian Lutheran Churches. I was at a Ladies' Aid meeting in Vancouver at Mrs. N. Nilsen's home, one of the nicest homes I saw.

I had another interesting visit at Strawberry Hill with an Eskimo family who live out there. Their name is Carpendeal and it was their daughter, Camilla, Ronald Ammundsen adopted, along with another girl called Nita. He brought these two girls with him from Siberia to Norway when he came back after discovering the North Pole. When Mr. Ammundsen was lost in the far north in searching for another expedition, these girls were sent back to Siberia. Nita had none of her folks there, but Carpendeal's, who had nine children of their own, gave her a home. She is now a grown girl and this winter she attended a Bible School in Red Deer, Alberta. She wants to be a Missionary. Camilla married to a nice Norwegian boy and they have three fine children. Mr. and Mrs. Carpendeal have a very nice home and I had tea with them. Mr. Carpendeal was born in Australia and he was a fur trader in Siberia before moving to B.C. Mrs. Carpendeal is Eskimo born and is a very nice person.

While I was out there we had snow once and quite a bit of rain but not so much fog. Fog is worse in November and December and I was there January, February, and most of March. When I left things were commencing to turn green and people were working in their gardens. For anyone whose intentions are to go out there to make their home, I would say, take a trip out there and see the country. I for my part, prefer the Alberta prairie.

It is a very interesting journey and anyone who hasn't seen the mountains will enjoy it. For us who grew up in a land where there are fjords and mountains, they don't seem so great.

Now, to anyone who reads these lines that I visited with out there, I send my heartiest thanks for the nice time you showed me and for the friendly hospitality I received from you all, so thanks again.

Mrs. A. Flaaten.

COMMUNICATION

To the Editor:

The Town of Tofield has appointed me Caretaker of our local cemetery and to start off with, I am organizing a general bee for Wednesday, April 19th, and would like all interested to try and get in on that day to have a general clean-up which is badly needed. I would suggest that each bring along a scythe, rake and fork. I will agree to look after any plot if anyone wishes me to do so for three dollars for the year. I may say that I have over 30 under contract now. It may surprise you to know that there are 273 laid to rest in our local cemetary. And with your co-operation I will do my best to make our cemetery a place to be proud of. I would not like to promise to do all in one year, but I am sure I can make it look better anyhow. So let's all get behind it, and thanking you in advance for your co-operation, I am,

Yours truly,
Walter Bellamy.

Special Film Will Be Shown At Tofield and Mackenzie

Part of the RCAF training program consists of the viewing of a Nutritional Film entitled "Training Table," specially prepared for the RCAF personnel by the RCAF Medical Branch. The Holden Health Unit, has through the co-operation of F.O. Allan D. C|O of the Holden Air Cadets been fortunate in obtaining this valuable techicolor sound picture, and it will be shown throughout the week at the National Film Board picture shows. Every person, child or adult, in the district should make a special effort to avail himself of the opportunity to see this valuable educational film.

In addition to the above attraction, Mrs. Vera Richard MacDonald, Supervisor of the Women's Extension Work of the Department of Agriculture, will lead the discussion. Since a great deal of effort has been entailed arranging this programme, a good turnout would be much appreciated by its sponsors.

INTERESTING PHOTO

Mr. Willard McHaffey who has recently returned from a visit to the Pacific Coast brought a very interesting picture to the office on Saturday. The photo is the property of Mr. C. Harriman of Bellingham, Wash., and is of the Tofield Oddfellows lodge of, we would guess, 1912. Quite a few in the group have passed on, others have left for other parts while not a few of them are around today. The features of the individuals are small and the photo is not particularly adapted to reproduction. Among those discernible are: Bert Whillans; Mark Ferguson; Mr. Harriman; Mr. Sherlock; Mrs. Hopgood; Mrs. Harriman; Mr. A. McMullen; J. W. McMullen; Mrs. Bert Whillans; R. W. Pinsott; Geo. Brace and others.

RED CROSS NOTES

We have some wool batts but are finding it difficult to purchase yard goods in quantity to make quilts. Donations of attractive print blocks or pieces of print, also alternate blocks of unbleached cotton would be greatly appreciated. The size of finished quilt will be approximately 63 inches by two and a half yards. The [illegible] also will be made of medium weight unbleached cotton. These can be made up in the Red Cross work room. They are in great demand for bedspreads in hospitals for the wounded. Make them cheerful and attractive to cheer the patients up.

Your help will be greatly appreciated.

Home Produced Maple Sugar

We were delightfully surprised on Saturday to have young John Warner come in with a genuine sample of home made maple sugar. It was good too. John had tapped some "Manitoba" Maple trees on the home farm and had obtained sufficient sap to make several quarts of syrup and some maple sugar as well.

In doing so he has opened up a new vista for maple syrup lovers here as it was generally supposed that maple syrup was an exclusive product of the eastern provinces.

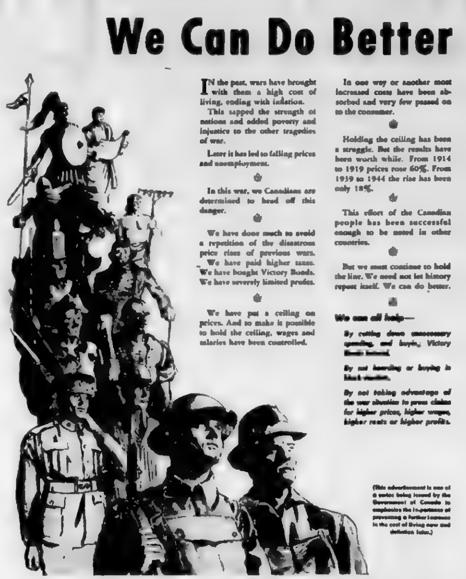
MAIL CARD FOR RATION BOOK FOUR

Edmonton, April 10--- People who failed to obtain Ration Book 4 during the distribution campaign may take or mail the red-lettered application card RB90, from the back of Ration Book 3 to the nearest Local Ration Board, or ration office of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board. All information must be complete on the application card before a new ration book is issued, says regional superintendent of rationing, C. G. McKee.

In the case of children under 18 years of age, the application card should be accompanied by the sheet of E coupons from the Number 3 Book, the superintendent states.

The original ruling applying to late applicants for new ration books was modified because many persons, through no fault of their own, were unable to call for Ration Book 4 during the distribution campaign.



We Can Do Better

IN the past, wars have brought with them a high cost of living, ending with inflation.

This sapped the strength of nations and added poverty and injustice to the other tragedies of war.

Later it has led to falling prices and unemployment.

In this war, we Canadians are determined to head off this danger.

We have done much to avoid a repetition of the disastrous price rises of previous wars. We have paid higher taxes. We have bought Victory Bonds. We have severely limited profits.

We have put a ceiling on prices. And to make it possible to hold the ceiling, wages and salaries have been controlled.

In one way or another most increased costs have been absorbed and very few passed on to the consumer.

Holding the ceiling has been a struggle. But the results have been worth while. From 1914 to 1919 prices rose 60%. From 1939 to 1944 the rise has been only 18%.

This effort of the Canadian people has been successful enough to be noted in other countries.

But we must continue to hold the line. We need not let history repeat itself. We can do better.

We can all help—

By cutting down unnecessary spending, and buying Victory Bonds [illegible]

By not hoarding or buying in black markets.

By not taking advantage of the war situation to press claims for higher prices, higher wages, higher rents or higher profits.

(This advertisement is one of a series being issued by the Government of Canada to emphasize the importance of preventing a further increase in the cost of living now and deflation later.)

"COMBINED OPERATIONS INCLUDE YOU"

● Invasion demands more action from every fighting service . . . combined operations. Combined operations include you, too.

Despite the shortage of help and equipment, Canadian farmers have responded nobly to demands for increased production of foods.

But there is one thing on which a better job can still be done.

MORE MONEY is needed to fight a more intensive war.

All Canadians will be asked to furnish this money. It's a duty that we who are at home owe to the men on the fighting fronts.

In these days most farmers have higher incomes . . . money to save. And that is the job that they are asked to do . . . save money and lend it to Canada.

You are not asked to give money . . . just to lend it. When the war is over you'll have this money to "plough back" into your farm. So save now to lend to your country. Save to have money to improve your farm; money for new stock and implements; money for more land or new buildings . . . for a new car . . . for new furnishings and conveniences for your home.

All you can lend is little enough for a cause so vital for a need so urgent. And the more that you can save and lend to your country now, the more you will have for your own use when the war ends.

ARE YOU A GOOD CANADIAN?—

(By Stan Parker, Secretary Public Relations Section, National War Finance Committee)

1944 IS THE YEAR of which historians will record achievements and failures in terms of world affairs which will be written in the pages of history for many generations to read.

Never in all history has the entire world been embroiled in such a conflict of savagery as now exists. The most complacent, peace-loving individuals experience a thrill of satisfaction when they receive the news that 100 or 1,000 men have been killed—of course, providing they are enemies — (a peculiar quirk of circumstance is that the only peoples on earth who are not fighting are the savages).

However, we are in this mess, right up to our necks and there's no drawing back or lying down on the job now. We have taken our stand and from every standard of rational thinking, we are right regardless of the fact that millions of people in the world say that we are wrong.

Greed and aspiration of power, jealousy and politics, too much religion and too little Christianity has enveloped the peoples of the world in a morass of confusion and bloodshed, broken hearts and broken bodies, homeless and orphaned children, desecrated shrines, bastard children, ruined homes and worst of all, shaken faith in all principles which comprise the laws of decent living.

Let us try to look at the picture under a different light---possibly we are learning a lesson the 'hard way'. When this terrible era has passed into history, we may have developed the philosophy which sustains life and decent living---"The Golden Rule."

The ironical part of all this is the fact that some, because of circumstances as they exist, while unable to participate in this orgy of killing are enabled to increase their earnings at the expense of those who are shedding their blood.

Do you realize that there is in Canada $15.00 for every $10.00 worth of commodities available? Reliable authority provides the information that there are no safety deposit boxes available in any bank in the country. Millions of Canadians have savings today who never had them before. War Savings Certificates and Bonds are responsible for this---children are being taught thrift, housewives are budgeting their expenses and people who have always lived from hand to mouth are beginning to feel a sense of importance in their everyday living because they have a stake in their future security. The uninformed and ignorant element are learning something of business, and the necessity of responsibility. The so-called 'big shots' are beginning to realize that the 'little man' provides the basis of his well-being and will, of necessity, treat him with respect.

When all is said and done, the 'big fellow's' million isn't as important as the 'little fellows' hundred because there are millions of little fellows as compared with the few big fellows. The poor man is in the happy position of knowing that there is a possibility of being rich sometime in the future while the rich man is constantly worrying about the possibility of being poor.

The farmer, the laborer, the mechanic, clerk and artisan: the stenographer and the housewife are essentially the important people in the world today. The 'little people' are plunging through the jungles in foreign lands, sailing the treacherous seas, defying the natural and man-made elements of death in the skies, tilling the soil and doing all the unglorious tasks which are all important for our continued existence and they are doing even more than that. They are contributing their earnings to the cause for which they are working and fighting.

Now for the darker side of the picture: There are a lot of people 'big' and 'little' who have not come to realize that the privileges which they enjoy are made possible by the people who are pulling the load. They complacently take everything for granted, and completely forget that the sumptuous meals they eat and the comforts they enjoy are the products of "blood, sweat and tears." With satisfied smiles they examine their bank balances but protest to high heaven of the injustice of income tax, have the sleeves torn from their coats in a mad crush to buy a bottle of liquor, squawk because domestic help have all joined the CWAC., criticize the leaders of governments and of war, regardless of who they might be, and in a thousand ways perpetuate the flow of "blood, sweat and tears."

The Sixth Victory Loan Campaign begins on April 24th, so, before that date, let us all decide in our own minds in what category we belong. There are lots of people who flagrantly display the little lapel badge proclaiming to the world their patriotism but it is not known that some of these people have thousands of dollars lying in the bank and have only purchased a $50.00 Bond.

Some of our citizens upon whose home soil, streams of blood are flowing and their relatives suffering inconceivable horror, still cannot see the necessity of their assistance in this struggle and even hide their money in the grain bin, the cellar or any other place to avoid doing their share. Thank God that they are in the minority. True, money will not win the war but without it, the blood of your brothers and sisters will so permeate the soil and the streams of the world, that the food you eat and the water you drink will be as a potent poison to body and soul.

If you are Canadian born or if you have lived on Canadian soil for six months, you are potentially Canadian. The life in your heart and veins has been derived from Canada. The food in your cupboard is Canadian. The clothes you wear, the roof over your head, the air you breathe, the money in your pocket or in the bank are all Canadian. Your privilege to express yourself at will, to listen to your radio and to read your uncensored newspaper is all yours because you live in Canada.

So---when the 6th Victory Loan begins---add up all the advantages, deduct all the things you think are wrong and you will find that your answer will be in favor of investing every cent possible in Victory Bonds which will give you a share in Victory and a stake in Canada's future and your own security.

WORLD OF WHEAT

By H.G.L. Strange

RUBBER AND WHEAT

According to a statement made by the Hon. C. D. Howe, Minister of Munitions, in the House of Commons on March 23rd, there is no chance whatever of synthetic rubber being made out of wheat. Mr. Howe stated that the large Dominion Rubber Plant at Sarnia started making rubber from wheat but finally switched to petroleum, because, said Mr. Howe, the cost of rubber made from petroleum is one third only of the cost of the same rubber if made from wheat.

Mr. Howe thought further that the cost of making synthetic rubber might be brought down eventually to as low as 16 cents a pound, and that at this price synthetic rubber might compete with natural rubber. Personally I doubt if this can ever be done for the reason that advances are still possible in improving the yield per acre of rubber trees, and in cutting down costs of production; and even if it could be done, I doubt the wisdom of doing it, for it does not appear, to me at least, to be fair nor in Canada's interests, to put millions of people out of employment whose sole method of making a living is the production and sale of natural rubber, and who with the proceeds purchase all kinds of goods and commodities, including wheat and flour, and which purchases directly or indirectly benefit Canadian people.

Courtesy A War Casualty Says Refugee From Japs

Winnipeg, April 10—Since his escape from a Japanese military prison at Hongkong, where, he says, "the proverbial Japanese politeness was conspicuously absent", R. A. Proulx, of the National Film Board, Ottawa, author of "Underground from Hongkong" has covered a lot of ground. He wrote to the passenger service department of Trans-Canada Air Lines, following a recent flight. "I crossed China, Burma, Assam, India then travelling to South Africa, New York and Ottawa. Since my return I motored extensively through Ontario, Quebec, Manitoba and Saskatchewan and visited over 200 towns, to say nothing of numerous trips to Toronto, New York, Montreal, etc. In these places I have been in hundreds of restaurants, hotels, pharmacies, gas stations, clothing stores, shops, pubs, soda fountains, banks, government offices, boarding houses, tourist cabins, book stores, theatres, etc. and have bought many articles. In only two places I found genuinely courteous service and understanding. I refer to Trans-Canada Air Lines and the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York. Business is good everywhere and the general attitude is one of 'take it or leave it'. In many places one meets with studied insolence. May I therefore congratulate Trans-Canada Air Lines and wish you continued success?"

Wheat Syrup Possible New Local Industry

Winnipeg, April 8--- "A process has been perfected for the manufacture of syrup from wheat", said Cecil Lamont, vice-president of the North-West Line Elevators Association, on his return today from attending the annual conference of the United States Farm Chemurgic Conference held at St Louis, Mo. The conference was attended by leaders of agriculture, industry and science from the United States, Canada, South America and China. Latest developments in science's search for finding new industrial uses for farm products were reviewed.

"Manufacture of syrup from wheat was developed at the United States Government's Northern Research laboratory at Peoria, Illinois. Commercial production is already under way at the rate of 1,000,000 pounds per month. Its quality and taste equals that of corn syrup. The new product is being manufactured in a beet sugar plant.

"Wheat syrup offers distinct possibilities for new industries in Western Canada and would result in a new market for wheat. There are three beet sugar plants located in Western Canada---one at Winnipeg and two in Alberta. In addition there are two plants in Ontario. These plants operate only from three to four months of the year in processing sugar beets. With slight plant adjustment they could engage in manufacturing wheat syrup for the remaining eight months of the year. These plants could produce upwards of 60,000,000 pounds of wheat syrup annually and do much to relieve the shortage of syrup and other sweetenings in Canada," the line elevators' spokesman said.

"United States Government representatives at the conference stated that 100,000,000 bushels of wheat would be used in the United States in 1944 for the manufacture of alcohol for war purposes. The quantity of wheat used in making alcohol during the past 18 months has done much to strengthen the price of wheat. Since 1938 the Line Elevator Companies have been urging intensified research into finding new industrial uses for wheat and other farm products and have consistently urged the Government to establish a Western Division of the National Research Council with fully equipped laboratories for farm products research work.

THE DIFFERENCE

The Government control and direction over the marketing of certain farm products during the present war has saved the farmers untold millions of dollars.

This is particularly true in the handling of bacon exports to Great Britain. Hon. J. G. Taggart, chairman of the Dominion Meat Board, said a few weeks ago that two billion pounds of Canadian bacon had been delivered to Britain since 1939, bringing a return of 466 million dollars. Of that total, the farmers got 387 million dollars or 83 per cent The processors obtained 34 million dollars, transportation costs totalled 30 million dollars and marketing agencies obtained 5 million dollars

During World War 1 there was no governmental control or direction, and packing houses and marketing agencies made extraordinarily high profits One Ontario "pork baron" is reported to have made 5 million dollars. Many individuals and corporations made quite substantial fortunes.

Other businesses made equally large returns in World War 1 For instance, one flour milling company made a profit of 72 per cent in 1918. Woollen companies obtained profits as high as 76 per cent and profits of cotton companies ran as high as 210 per cent in a single year A whole new crop of Canadian millionaires emerged from World War 1.

Affairs are conducted quite differently in the present war and operations of the Bacon Board—a government organization---as mentioned above, resulted in farmers obtaining 83 per cent of the total final sale price of the bacon they produced Never before in the history of Canada have hog producers obtained such a large percentage of the consumer's dollar. —Wheat Pool Bulletin.

THERE ARE MORE GOOD REASONS FOR BUYING WAR BONDS THAN FOR BUYING ANY SINGLE THING EVER OFFERED TO THE CANADIAN PEOPLE

EVERYONE of us wants to win this war—to see peace restored—to have them get back to us when the war is won

MILLIONS of us, already in the Armed Services have dedicated time, effort, lives if need be to the Nation

The rest of us have not been called to arms Our big chance to get into the fight is to buy the Sixth War Loan to the absolute limit

This is the People's Loan, and we the People, will not fail—

We will not fail to buy Bonds and keep them

We will not fail to buy Bonds— and so help to keep Canada the kind of land they want to see when they come home.

REMEMBER—We are lending not spending.

The money we lend is still ours to use in the years ahead when we need it most

ADDRESSES ON THE MOVE...
IN SPITE OF ALL WAR HAZARDS
31.500.000 LETTERS
REACHED YOUR MEN OVERSEAS LAST YEAR

Do you remember the "Change of Address" form which you filled out when you moved your civilian home? After that was filed at your local Post Office, every letter sent to your old address had to be redirected to the new one, and that went on until your correspondents were familiar with your new location.

Probably you didn't move very often, but each time you did, the Post Office gave redirectory service. And if you will think about that for a moment, you will begin to see what a stupendous task confronts the Canadian Postal Corps in handling the military mails, when thousands of men are being moved almost daily!

Yet, in spite of the need of tracing men from reinforcement units to their locations on fighting fronts ... in spite of the need of tracing them through hospitalization ... or while on leave ... when their unit is moved ... in spite of delays in air mail service caused by adverse flying conditions ... of delays in surface transportation caused by enemy action ... in spite of every war hazard you can think of ... your Post Office and the Canadian Postal Corps delivered 31,500,000 letters to men overseas in 1943!

It is inevitable that, in tracing men who have been moved, or wounded, some delays occur. It is inevitable that enemy action holds up delivery in some cases. But everything that human ingenuity and effort can do to give you a service that means speedier delivery of the letters your men are waiting for, is being well and thoroughly done, and will be done. New methods of speeding mail deliveries are being put into effect, new possibilities are being studied. Think of your own friends who have been posted to new locations overseas, and realize the task of tracing them when their mail arrives at their former address!

You can help your Post Office and the Canadian Postal Corps to give even better service if you will take a moment to make sure that your mail is correctly prepared. Do these simple things...

1. Always be sure each letter or parcel (properly packed) is fully and correctly addressed.
2. Use light-weight paper for regular Air Mail, or use the Armed Forces Air Letter Forms. Airgraph letters take a little longer because they must be processed in Canada and overseas.
3. To men in hospital, mark your letter "In Hospital", if you are advised to this effect.
4. Never put into parcels perishable food, or any substance that can be damaged by extremes of temperature.

Trodden Underfoot Mercury Re-appears

After being walked upon for over 30 years a copy of the Tofield Mercury came to light this spring when Wm. Thompson was taking up a carpet. The copy is dated June 29th, [illegible] and contains some interesting news.

We note the [illegible] Journal gave a radio program with a radio set at the Variety Theatre. Radio was then a new innovation. Tofield and Ryley played a game of ball which ended in a tie. The Tofield Chautauqua opened. Church Union was announced for the following Sunday. A largely attended wedding was held at Bardo when Magda Pauline Anderson was married to Geo. E. Hendrickson of Scandia, 300 being present. Ketchamoot sports were held, with Kingman and Ketchamoot only playing three innings "when the storm came up" score 1-1. The editorial had something to say about freight rates. Roger Bros. had a half page ad; Tofield Farmers' Supply 30 inches; Hingley was with us; John Chapman was wielding a paint brush and A.J.H. McCauley was advertising fire insurance. The poetry department had four lines, here they are:

This world that we're a livin' in
Is mighty hard to beat;
You get a thorn with every rose,
But ain't the roses sweet.

Good Crowd At Picture Show

The National Film Board picture show presented last Saturday at the Variety Theatre, Tofield, was well attended, A. B. Clutterham, chairman. It was a very full program, two additional features besides the regular program being added. There was a Nutritional film showing RCAF food arrangements which was enlarged upon by Dr. Cutsungavich. There was also two special Victory Loan films and a short address by Gunner Leminske, a returned man from the present conflict.

Special thanks are due Mr. Sawreluck, the operator, for his kindness in running through so many films. It was near midnight when the program ended and he still had to make the journey to Edmonton.

Delegations And Varied Business Make Two Day Session Necessary

M D. of Beaver April meeting was a two day session, a full agenda and several delegations keeping the council working until 10:00 p.m. Saturday night. Important business was transacted including arranging to apply for a $25,000 00 road grant from the government, some of it to be used in gravelling; the purchase of $8000.00 Victory Loan Bonds; the purchase of road building equipment; and adopting the policy of giving a small grant to offset the original cost of ladies' rest rooms costing $500.00 or more in towns within the M D. area.

The meeting opened at Ryley on Friday, April 14th, there being present: Reeve Anderson; Councillors Giebelhaus, Logan, Lucas, Moen, Ovens and Swabey.

Minutes of previous meeting were read and adopted.

The official report of the returning officer in connection with the recent municipal election was read and filed.

Communication from the Dept. of Municipal Affairs approving the appointment of an assessor was read.

Matters concerning Old Age Pensions and Mothers' Allowance were dealt with.

The Edmonton Hospital Advisory Council wrote regarding the new government arrangement by which maternity cases were given free hospitalization up to twelve days. The hospital desired to treat these as M.D. accounts, first charging the M.D. the per day as per contract and then crediting the M.D. with 60c per day, retaining the 25c per day to take care of those indigents who did not pay.

Council was of the opinion that inasmuch as the provin. government pays all charges for the first 12 days on all Alberta maternity cases, council should not be called on to pay anything and on motion of Councillor Moen, secretary was requested to advise the Edmonton Hospital Advisory Council that as the provincial government was paying all charges in connection with maternity cases, Council did not feel responsible for any payment whatsoever in connection therewith.

Some hospital admissions were checked and three relief cases dealt with.

A letter from the Field Crops Branch Department of Agriculture regarding the purchase of a quantity of White Dutch Clover was read. The letter pointed out that this seed was relatively scarce and quite high in price and suggested some other variety might do. Council needed this seed for the sides of roads as this variety was a quick spreader and did not grow very high. Council decided to buy about 50 pounds if seed was available.

CORRESPONDENCE:

Patriquin and Johnston acknowledging appointment as auditors.

Department of Lands and Mines regarding the appointment of fire guardians.

Communication from Seed Grain and Relief Adjustment Board re Dominion Seed Grain Lien on two old accounts. It was pointed out that a seed grain and relief account constituted a first claim on the land but consideration would be given and concessions perhaps made. Council took no action.

Mr. Galkin of Viking interviewed Council regarding the gravelling of high grade roads. He had three months work in Flagstaff M.D. and after that he would be looking for work. Discussion brought out that the cost of gravelling ran from 71c to $1.02 per yard, according to distance of road from gravel pit, and about 350 yards of gravel was used per mile.

Reeve Anderson informed Mr. Galkin that Council would likely do some gravelling this summer but it was not quite ready to do business. Council would like to keep in touch with him.

Mr. Barber from Bruce interviewed Council regarding the N.E. 4-47-14. This quarter was a family estate matter and Mr Barber said his sister would prefer that the farm be left for the two boys who were overseas rather than have it sold for taxes. Mr. Barber wished to rent or lease it and promised to keep the current taxes paid up.

On the motion of Councillor Logan it was decided to lease the N E. 4-47-14 for one year at $100 00 and current taxes.

Mr. Brassard interviewed Council re the purchase of the above mentioned quarter and was informed by Reeve Anderson that the land had just been leased for one year to Mr Barber. Mr Brassard said this was quite alright. He was prepared to submit an offer but was equally pleased to see the land stay under the present ownership.

On the motion of Councillor Logan the secretary will get full particulars as to the various interests which were involved in the above quarter.

Mr Farion interviewed the Council regarding claim made last spring. Due to road conditions traffic went across his field. He asked for remuneration. Council was of the opinion it could not allow damages.

A delegation consisting of Mrs. Thorsley, J. Jevning of Ryley, J E Stinson and W Davison of Tofield, interviewed Council regarding municipal hospital matters. Mrs Thorsley who acted as spokesman said the delegation were requesting that the Council reconsider their resolution regarding the proposed municipal hospital at Holden. The delegation felt that a larger hospital district with a corresponding larger hospital would be of greater service. It was recalled that in 1941 a meeting between Holden, Ryley and Tofield was held regarding a municipal hospital district and due to the war the matter was left over. In 1942 a resolution was passed in Municipal District of Beaver Lake asking that hospital matter be left over due to war conditions. In view of this the delegation were requesting that Council reconsider their resolution regarding Holden Hospital District.

Councillor Moen said he thought that a Municipal Hospital area should be a fairly large one. He did not vote for the motion which was being asked to be re-considered because he believed the district to be too small. He was in favor of a large area. He also felt that the large municipal districts should be synonomous with other things such as school district, health district, hospital district and even provincial constituencies He was of the opinion the people should express their opinion as to where a hospital should be located.

Councillor Giebelhaus said the delegation desired the Council to rescind the motion passed at a recent meeting which recommended that the Minister authorize a vote within the proposed area. This would place the council in an embarrassing position Those interested should go out and get the required 25 per cent vote in the large area.

Councillor Ovens said the delegation should go to Holden and try to co-operate, if not, then drop the matter. The Holden delegation asked council to give their district an opportunity to vote on the municipal hospital question, the Council did this and he for one did not intend to take it away from them.

Reeve Anderson said that whether the Council's resolution regarding Holden Hospital area was a wise one or not was beside the point now. Very often a situation appeared differently after a few days consideration. In any event the Council had no power to authorize a vote, only to recommend that a vote be authorized. The Minister had the final say as to whether a vote should be held Councillor Ovens: (humorously) If we could only get rid of these little towns we would get along better.

Mr. Grierson, representative of the Union Tractor Company interviewed council. Mr. Grierson said that he was pleased to meet council and that he hoped he could be of some service to it. Questioned as to Diesel tractors he said diesel tractors were scarce. There had only been 12 allocated to Canada during the past three months. He would however, do his best. The Letourneau Carrymore was, he said, in Edmonton and could be delivered any time.

Moved by Councillor Swabey that we finish the deal for the Carrymore. Carried.

Moved by Councillor Moen that the Carrymore be paid for with Victory bonds. Carried.

Moved by Councillor Moen that all big machinery be purchased as a municipal unit.

Moved by Councillor Giebelhaus that the motor patrol be excluded from above motion. Councillor Giebelhaus went on to say that we now have enough elevating machines for the needs of the district but each division should have a patrol

It was announced that the Letourneau Carrymore that is being purchased is the first one approved for Canada for municipal work since the war started.

Council discussed the purchase of a Motor Patrol but no decision was made.

Mr. J L Jones, Tofield, interviewed council regarding operating a caterpillar tractor this summer. Mr. Jones outlined his experience Decision on this was left over for the time being.

Mr Bergen interviewed Council regarding obtaining contract for road work. He possessed tractor, 8 yard scraper and bulldozer. The charges would be $9 00 per hour No immediate action was taken.

This brought to a close Friday's meeting. A report of Saturday's meeting which opened at 10:00 a m and closed at 10.00 p.m will appear in next week's Mercury.

Have YOU thought

What it means to wear this emblem!

When you listen to news of what our boys are going through overseas
... and read the casualty lists in your newspaper every day
... and measure the sorrow and anxiety that have come to thousands of Canadian homes — and may come to many more ...
Are your satisfied that you are doing ALL YOU CAN?
Our men and women in uniform are ready, if need be, to die for Canada, for Freedom, for YOU.
Compared with that, no amount of self-denial is too great.
Are you prepared to put EVERY SINGLE DOLLAR YOU CAN SAVE into Victory bonds? Into bonds that will assure a steady flow of vital supplies to bring Victory closer?
That's what YOU can do to help shorten the war, to save precious lives. And that's what the wearing of this emblem means — that you too are doing your share ... that you are buying all the Victory Bonds you can!

The Care of God's Acre

(Family Herald and Weekly Star)

The letter on the "Voice of the Farm" page this week regarding the care of rural cemeteries deserves attention from country people in every part of Canada

In the older provinces one cannot drive very far without passing some such burial ground Nor, if one is endowed with imagination and sympathy, can one pass them by without a thought.

To us, the first of those thoughts is of the lives lived by the quiet, hard working men and women who now rest in those peaceful, lonely, and too often neglected corners. An important part of our history lies enshrined there. In those neglected spots lie the simple folk who literally gave us Canada. It was they who created the amazing productive fields around, from harsh forests and wastelands It was they who endured and wrought toughly and patiently for a harvest that could only be garnered by their children or their grandchildren

Whatever our present problems and hardships, we have escaped many of the harder ones which they had to endure.

Do we honor their memory according to their deserts, and to our debt?

In some ways we do There is little tendency, when we give the subject thought, to underestimate the worth of those common folk of older times But in practical, concrete matter of honoring their resting places, we are too often neglectful

In his letter Mr Fawcett suggests that governments might do something That might be a good thing -- at least as far as a general plan is concerned But this is not a matter where the first and obvious responsibility lies with a distant government.

There is no valid reason in the world why any local community, any little group, should not do all that is necessary themselves -- and now

Why should we not have a memorial "bee" wherever it is necessary, and renew and beautify our own neglected "God's Acre?" How little time, effort and expense it would involve! How valuable it would be for young and old alike, to restore that practical little link with the men who labored and the women who endured -- for them!

And afterwards, a single such gathering each year would be enough to keep "God's Acre" worthy of its purpose. One day's work a year by a few neighboring families -- easily organized, cheerfully given, would restore every little consecrated corner of history in Canada.

Why do we need to look to governments to perform this simple, easy happy duty?

Give this Man a Warm Welcome

You may not regard the Victory Loan salesman as a salesman when he calls on you. He is a man from your community whom you likely know well . . . perhaps a neighbor. He may never have done any selling before.

He has taken on this work because he feels that it is an important war job that must be done.

As a matter of fact he is not trying to sell you anything. He will ask you to save money.

Farmers are doing an important war job, too . . . producing food. Most farmers have increased their incomes. They have money to save.

You plan to use this money, and the things you plan to use it for are necessary things.

The Victory Loan salesman will ask you to let your country have the use of your savings now by putting your money into Victory Bonds.

Our big job now is to win the war, and to win it as soon as we can. That's why every Canadian is asked to buy Victory Bonds. It's why each of us is asked to buy all we can. You can buy them with cash, which you have saved, and you can buy more bonds and pay for them as you earn money, over a period of six months.

THE POST OFFICE ADVERTISES—

LAST WEEK WAS, to the best of our knowledge, the first time we have ever carried an advertising message on behalf of the Canadian Post Office. That the Canadian Post Office, an almost perfect distribution medium within itself, should decide to use the newspaper as a medium to deliver an important message to the Canadian public, should be a source of gratification to the newspaper fraternity generally.

No doubt, post office authorities believe as do many others, that the newspaper and periodical has an appeal to the general public that a more direct approach lacks.

All of us take the post office for granted. The sending and receiving of letters is among our earliest memories and an existence without a post office department could hardly be imagined. But the system by which a letter or parcel is dropped at one point on the earth's surface and seemingly miraculously find its way to another point on the earth's surface and into the hands of the person for whom it is intended, is little understood. Even knowledge of the distribution of mail within the dominion leaves most of us something like the fellow who, when informed by his hostess that she did not understand electric light, said: "It's very simple, you press a button and the light is there." You drop a letter and it is carried to its destination.

Even in peace time the work performed by the post office department which includes thousands of post offices is a marvel of co-ordination, but now with the tremendous upheaval in the lives of hundreds of thousands of our citizens, the work has tremendously increased and has become extremely more complicated. There is hardly a home in the Dominion from which someone has not left or someone entered during the past few years necessitating correspondence. Some of it to the most remote regions of the earth—some of it to the most congested. That the post office department has responded magnificently to this unprecedented increase in business is well enough known, but what is not known is the nature of the many and varied difficulties the postal department has to overcome to give the Canadian public the excellent service that they have given. The series of advertisements now running is by word and picture giving at least a part of this information. Those having relatives or friends in the armed forces (and who haven't?) will find this series of advertisements both instructive and helpful.

THE HOSPITAL QUESTION—

INASMUCH AS THE QUESTION of a municipal hospital district for these parts has cropped up at intervals over a period of almost a quarter of a century, very much could be written on the subject. But we doubt very much if any good purpose would be served by reciting some of the particulars of past attempts or even enlarging upon the present one. Of late years, rightly or wrongly, we have come to appraise public innovations from the viewpoint of the average rural ratepayer. Generally speaking it is his and her work and play and general activity which provide the foundation for most other lines of endeavor, and while we know that professional men, artisans and merchants are a vital part of any western community, it is to the average rural ratepayer that they look for sustenance. We do not wish to become melodramatic and write sob-stuff about the down trodden farmer (even if in some cases quite true) as there are plenty of farmers better off financially than country editors, and whose opportunity to provide the necessities of life is more sure. But we do feel that while other interests may be praiseworthy, in considering the hospital question at this time, it is the interests of the people who will ultimately be called upon to support it which should be considered.

Ordinarily we are very enthusiastic about the establishment of a needed municipal hospital, but for the immediate present we prefer to wait at least a year and see what develops as regards the proposed Dominion Health Insurance Scheme. Under this scheme, if we understand it correctly, medical attention and hospitalization is included under the one plan.

CONGRATULATIONS—

TO THOSE YOUNG PEOPLE of this area who did so well at the Spring Show congratulations from the rest of us are in order. To Miss Dorothy Kallal who, both last year and this year, made such an excellent showing, special praise is due. She has brought agricultural honor to herself, her folks and her district. Nice work!

Albert Sees Likes England

Dear Folks,

Just a few lines to let you know that I arrived in the Old country O.K It is really a lovely place, a lot better then I had ever imagined it to be. The grass is high enough to mow and there are quite a few flowers out in bloom. We have been here two days but I was pretty tired or I would have written sooner. Sorry I cannot tell you when we left, where we landed, or what boat we travelled on. We worked 4 hours and had 12 off so maybe it wasn't so bad to have something to do. It was a good sized ship so was pretty steady but even so, most of the fellows were sick. I didn't get sea sick but didn't feel so good one day, think it was something we had for supper. Just the same we were glad to see land, as there is a steady motion all the time and the boat is always rolling. I was in a cabin along with 11 other fellows. We had about the best quarters on the ship as there were lots of fellows in hammocks way down below.

Boy! it sure is a nice place, wouldn't mind spending the summer right here. We are billeted in an old hotel, two in a room. The grub is good, as good as we had in Rivers. There is only one thing I don't care much for and that is tea, if they would only give us coffee once a day it wouldn't be so bad. I don't see any signs of anybody going hungry and there seems to be plenty in the stores Prices seem to be very high tho', higher [illegible]. We missed breakfast the first morning and had it in a cafe. It was only a fair meal but we figured we got back 11c out of a dollar. I am still having trouble figuring out this money but guess it will come to me yet

Well I know now why the English always carry an umbrella, but today is very nice, just like summer out and the sun has shone all day. There is a cherry tree in blossom outside the window, wish I could send you a flower. We don't know how long they will keep us here. Guess we will not be much good to them until we learn a little as they do not use much over here There are lots of planes around today and they really whistle along Haven't seen any Jerries yet, but have seen the results of some of his calls There are quite a few big buildings knocked down 2 blocks from our billet.

I also know how a pack horse must feel as we had to pack all our kits along. Boy, it really got heavy but we always managed to stagger along. We got quite a kick out of the trains over here but they don't waste any time and really zip along The freights are the worst as they only have 4 wheels and they carry 8 to 10 tons

Haven't seen any from Tofield but have met a few I knew before I am going to write Lyle and see if I can meet him some place as I still have Esther's cake. He might be somewhere pretty close as there are lots of soldiers around.

I sent a wire when we arrived so hope you received it O K It was a little late for birthday greetings but better late than never, eh? I hope to get a letter pretty soon, so just keep on sending them along

They don't let us have much time off, but always find something for us to do We are on fire watch and have to see if the blackout curtains are all closed and no light is showing through We are also to be on the look out for any fires breaking out. Hope it isn't too long as we still are pretty tired from our trip.

I will send this air mail, let me know how long it takes to reach you.

Albert.

ALL SET!

Every man in his squadron is ready! Every man in the forces of sea and land and air is ready — waiting for the last, BIG PUSH!

ARE YOU? There are some Canadians who aren't. Some men and women who are not taking their full part in the struggle for freedom — who haven't even bought as many Victory Bonds as they possibly can. Are you one of them?

It's not too late! Zero hour is near, but there's still time to get in the fight!

THIS is a war of movement. Never before have troops been moved such incredible distances, in so many theatres of war, so quickly. WORLD OF WHEAT

By H.G.L. Strange

RATES OF SEEDING

Recent experiments made by the Dominion Experimental Farms and by the "Crop Testing Plan" indicate that farmers at times have lost some yield by sowing their grains at too low a rate per acre. Grains which have large kernels such as Red Bobs, Marquis and Regent wheat, and such barley varieties as Plush, Newal, Warrior, Sunalta, Rex and Hannchen need to be sown at a higher rate to the acre than smaller kernelled varieties such as Thatcher wheat or Gartons O.A.C. 21, Mensury, Wisconsin 38, Regal, Prospect and Titan barleys.

It is further found that if seeding is delayed for any reason then a heavier rate of seeding is required to obtain the same yield.

It is discovered also that if the land is light and sandy, early seeding will give better results than late seeding. Somewhat heavier seeding of any grain, too, will help better to control weeds.

The Dominion Experimental Farm, Lethbridge, tells us that they have found there is no advantage to be gained in lighter sowing because of a dry season.

All in all, then, it would appear that there is some risk of a loss in yield by sowing at too low a rate. Whenever, therefore, the farmer is in doubt it would appear that heavier sowing will give him a better assurance of a higher yield.

Ministik

Another old timer gone dead. Oh, no! they are just going to start living and enjoy life. A farewell party for Mr. and Mrs. Edwards was held at the hall Tuesday evening, April 11th. 80 persons gathered there and we all spent a very happy social evening playing whist, Five Hundred, and bingo. During the evening Mr. Stanley George who has been a neighbor of Mr. Edwards for over 30 years, spoke on the occasion. Then on behalf of the community, Mrs. E. Swabey presented Mrs. Edwards with a nice handbag and Mr. Edwards a pen and pencil set. Everyone joined in wishing them the best of luck.

Walter George was home over the week end last week. While helping to saw wood at A. J. Leach's, he had the misfortune to badly cut his thumb on the saw.

We are sorry to hear Mrs. Grummett is sick, but hope she will soon be feeling better and be out among us again.

A Whist Drive was held at Ministik Hall on Monday night, April 10th. Seven tables played. It was put on by the Ministik S.C. group. We were pleased to have some of the Hastings Lake group with us. Everyone had a good time.

To the strains of the wedding march from Lohengrin, played by Miss Queenie Bertram of Brooks, the bride, lovely in a floor length gown of white sheer and a finger-tip veil, entered the church on the arm of her father. She carried a bouquet of tea roses and her only ornament was a string of pearls.

Much Business Done at Saturday's M.D. Meeting

LARGE GOVERNMENT ROAD GRANT REQUESTED

M.D. of Beaver Council went into session quite close to 10:00 a.m. Saturday morning and after one or two preliminary items of business had been attended to, received a delegation from Bardo consisting of Messrs. Bennie Anderson, M. Hagen and J. Stauffer. The delegation explained that they were representing a number of ratepayers on the road which was formerly the boundary line between the former M.D.'s of Cornhill and Beaver Lake. Because of this, the road which runs south just east of Tofield was somewhat neglected. It was a well travelled road and the ratepayers living on and near the road were asking that this road be graded this year.

Councillor Moen said that plans had already been made to do work on this road and a road outfit was expected to be there the following week. A short discussion then ensued as to the method, the delegation preferring one method and Councillor Moen having planned another. The delegation finally decided to wait a week, saying that as the road had waited fifty years they could wait one week.

Letter from Mrs. B. Smorlie regarding reduction of taxes in which she offered council a per centage of taxes in complete settlement. The situation concerning this land was somewhat complicated and the arrears amounted to a considerable sum After considerable discussion, during which the interests of the M.D. were viewed from different angles, on the motion of Councillor Moen Council decided to accept the offer submitted, providing the necessary amount was paid immediately.

On the motion of Councillor Logan the report of the Holden Drainage District was received and filed.

Letter from superintendent of Alberta Treasury Branches in which the various functions of the Treasury Branches were explained. This covered rates of interest, agencies and sub agencies and their particular facilities for assisting in the collection of taxes. The letter requested the M.D.'s business.

Councillor Giebelhaus was of the opinion that the M.D. should give them all their business.

Adjournment for lunch.

Re-assembling at 1:15 discussion was resumed regarding the proportion of the M.D.'s business given to the banks and treasury branches

Councillor Giebelhaus moved that we give the Treasury House approximately 50 per cent of our business and that we have a recorded vote on the question.

For the motion: Councillors Giebelhaus, Logan and Ovens. Against, Councillors Swabey, Lucas, Anderson. Councillor Moen preferred not to vote. However as the vote was a tie, Councillor Moen voted in the negative and the vote was lost.

Councillor Ovens moved that we use the Treasury Houses for a fair portion of our business. This motion was carried.

On the motion by Councillor Lucas and Logan, the Reeve and Secretary were made signing officers for the M.D.

A petition from a returned soldiers' group was read. The petition was asking for funds in order to set up a proper organization so that the interests of returned men would be properly looked after All the councillors made a contribution and on the motion of Councillor Logan the M.D. contributed $10.00 and will keep the petition in the office until filled and then return it.

Councillor Ovens announced that a request for a grant to go towards building a rest room in Viking had been received. The M.D. of Minburn had made a substantial grant and he moved that $150 00 be given to the Viking authorities for this purpose.

Councillor Logan moved as an amendment that the amount be lowered to $100.00. The motion was lost and the amendment carried unanimously.

The matter of grants to worthy organizations came up for consideration, Reeve Anderson announcing that the Junior calf club at McKenzie was doing excellent work and he would like to move that a grant of $50.00 be given them. This was carried Other grants included $100.00 for the Beulah home and $200.00 for the National Institute for the Blind.

Councillor Logan moved that the Salvation Army be given a grant of $500 00

Councillor Giebelhaus moved an amendment that the grant to the Salvation Army be $300.00.

The amendment lost and the motion carried.

Roman Kondrowski wished to purchase lots 19-24, hamlet of Poe.

Mrs. E. S. Hill of Torlea offered $150.00 for S.E. 36-48-14 W4

On the motion of Councillor Logan the foregoing two applications were [illegible].

Mrs. A. Helm of Bruce wished to purchase S half of 27-49-14 W4. On the motion of Councillor Lucas, Councillor Giebelhaus was given authority to make what deal he thinks fit. This also applies to E. half 27-49-19 W4.

A. Robertson, Ardrossan, wished to purchase quarter section at $800. This was sold with $80.00 down and terms on the balance.

Fritz Olson of Tofield wished to purchase 10-50-20 W4. He offered $325.00. On the motion of Reeve Anderson the offer was tabled.

E. Belcourt wished to purchase N. E. 6-50-20 and made an offer of $300.00. This was left for Councillor Anderson to attend to.

On the motion of Councillor Logan Mr. Pasnik will be allowed to lease the same land as last year. This and some other leasing arrangements were covered by bylaws.

E. Anderson of N.E. 3-50-20, W4 wrote complaining of the state of the road. Traffic had to pass over his land He had asked for and had been promised a road long ago by the Cornhill M.D. This was referred to Reeve Anderson for attention.

Peter Kilishtof of Ryley complained that water was flooding his field. He said that the M.D. has diverted water from the natural run. In discussion it was brought out that culvert was delivered last July for his approach but he did not put it in. Reeve Anderson and Councillor Lucas will inspect it some time.

It was announced that the Social Service tax was 92 and a half per cent of three mills on the 1943 assessment. On the motion of Councillor Logan the social service tax was set at three mills.

Discount for early payment of taxes came under consideration and on the motion of Councillor Ovens, a discount of eight per cent for 30 days after mailing date of tax notice will be allowed on current taxes and four per cent until December 1st.

HERD BYLAW

A bylaw putting all of M.D. of Beaver under a herd law was given its first and second reading

On the motion of Councillor Moen, Mr. Ole Hagen was appointed pound-keeper at W. half of 35-50-17.

A bylaw to purchase Victory Bonds to the value of $8000.00 was passed. Councillors Ovens, Swabey, and Lucas moved the 1st, 2nd and 3rd reading

Accounts and hospital bills were read, approved and passed for payment.

Remuneration for Councillors came up for consideration and on the motion of Councillor Logan remuneration will be $6.00 per day for meetings and $5 00 per day for road work supervision.

Have YOU thought

What it means to wear this emblem!

When you listen to news of what our boys are going through overseas . . .

. . . and read the casualty lists in your newspaper every day . . .

. . . and measure the sorrow and anxiety that have come to thousands of Canadian homes — and may come to many more . . .

Are you satisfied that you are doing ALL YOU CAN?

Our men and women in uniform are ready, if need be, to die for Canada, for Freedom, for YOU.

Compared with that, no amount of self-denial is too great.

Are you prepared to put EVERY SINGLE DOLLAR YOU CAN SAVE into Victory bonds? Into bonds that will assure a steady flow of vital supplies to bring Victory closer?

That's what YOU can do to help shorten the war, to save precious lives. And that's what the wearing of this emblem means — that you too are doing your share . . . that you are buying all the Victory Bonds you can!

HEALTH PLAN IS PRESSED BY OTTAWA

OTTAWA NEWS LETTER

Ottawa. The Dominion Government [illegible]ed to proceed with its major social security legislation this session. It was feared that introduction of the Health Insurance Bill might be delayed because of the difficulty of holding an early Dominion-Provincial Conference. To obviate this a conference of federal and provincial health ministers and deputy ministers has been arranged for three days, starting May 10 at which it is hoped to reach an agreement which will permit each to inaugurate a dominion-wide health insurance program.

It is expected that the family allowance plan announced in the Speech from the Throne will be presented to Parliament as soon as the major war estimates and the budget debate have been concluded. For institution of family allowances the Dominion does not need provincial action because the Federal Parliament has full authority. It is likely that soon after Parliament resumes its sittings on April 17, the family allowance proposal will be submitted to members for their study, while the actual debate and passage of the necessary legislation will proceed as soon as possible afterwards. There are several important details of the Family Allowance plan still to be settled by Cabinet. One is the question as to whether a limit will be placed on the number of children for whom monthly payments will be made to parents. Another is whether or not the monthly allowance will be the same for children of all ages. It is probable that a graded scale may be proposed, with larger allowances for older children. It is expected that all details will be settled either before Prime Minister King leaves for Britain to attend the conference of dominion prime ministers or soon after his return.

Because it is within provincial jurisdiction, co-operation of the provinces is necessary for a nation-wide health insurance plan. If the provinces cannot agree, it is likely the Federal Parliament will pass enabling legislation. Such provinces as desire could then take concurrent action to put the scheme into effect. But what is hoped for is sufficient agreement for a Dominion act which will be largely acceptable to all provinces, thus ensuring a uniform measure of health insurance all across Canada.

OPPOSITION SUPPORTS INDUSTRIAL BANKS

Both the government and members of all parties are devoting a great deal of attention now to steps designed to solve post-war difficulties and maintain or increase employment, prosperity and the living standards of the people. The Government plan for an Industrial Development Bank intended mainly to aid small industries and convert war plants back to civilian production is well advanced. In principle it has received considerable support from members of opposition parties in the Commons. In addition, it is known that Federal authorities are planning a big housing program, a large-scale project of public works, vast reforestation in various parts of the Dominion and various aids to primary industries.

WAR WEAPONS COST REDUCED

Reduction in price of war equipment due to development of mass production and revision of contracts will save the Dominion more than $100,000,000 this year. On Harvard training planes which originally cost $27,000 but are now being made for $3,000 less per machine, the saving this year will be $4,000,000. On rifles, cost of which was reduced from $62 to $32 each, the saving this year will be $9,000000. Universal carriers originally cost $4500 but the price has been cut to $3000. This will save $16,300,000 this year. Careful comparison of the Canadian purchasing and contract system for war supplies shows that it has operated as well or better for the taxpayers as that of any other country. Cost of many items, including anti-craft gun barrels, has been cut in half since the start of the war.

WILL ORDER BUSES CARRY FIRST AID

New regulations to be adopted by the provincial highway traffic board will require motor buses to carry first aid equipment, according to information received by the Alberta Motor Association.

Such equipment is required in some other provinces, it is understood, and the Alberta board is giving consideration to a similar regulation which would be of a general application.

In view of the large volume of passenger traffic on Alberta buses, it has been suggested that these vehicles should be required to carry first aid equipment in case of emergency or accident. Some buses operating in the province now carry such equipment.

A new board regulation required truckers to paint their license number on the body of the truck, "where the body is so constructed as to make the license markers on the rear window invisible from the rear."

In the license year ended March 31, last, there were 34,300 motor truck licenses issued by the board, compared with 32,136 in the previous year. The number issued since April 1 exceeds the corresponding period of last year.

BRACKEN CLUBS WELCOMED TO ALBERTA

Organization of the first Bracken Club in the province of Alberta is taking place at Calgary on April 21. Arrangements are being made for the formation of another Bracken Club in Edmonton before the end of the present month. Originating in Winnipeg, sounding the clarion note that a better informed electorate is the foundation of better government, recruited from affiliates of all parties and citizens who have never had party affiliations, Bracken Clubs are thus staging a friendly invasion of Alberta.

So popular was the first Bracken Club which sprang almost full grown from Winnipeg that requests for information about it came thick and fast from outside points in Manitoba, as well as from other provinces. Winnipeg appointed an extension committee which invited friends of the Bracken Club movement from all provinces to a series of meetings at which it was decided that the visitors should form themselves into a provisional national committee to organize Bracken Clubs throughout the Dominion. At these meetings a set of resolutions covering both the objectives and methods of organization were drawn up.

From the beginning it was determined that Bracken Clubs would be open to any good citizen, regardless of party, creed, race or sex; that they should foster better information about important national problems and bring intelligent action by the people to the furtherance of better government in Canada.

Since the original Bracken Club was founded, they have spread through the Prairies on a wide scale and two Bracken Clubs are flourishing in the old City of Quebec. It is natural to assume that they will be equally popular in our own province.

The Wiebe family have moved onto the Howard Stine farm. Three children are attending school. This swells the number of pupils of the Lindbrook Jr. room to forty-two.

The Ernest LaRocque family have moved to Tofield where Mr. La Rocque is working for A. Francis.

Horace McHaffey of the RCAF, who is entertaining the Air Force boys by tap dancing and chalk talk drawings, entertained the young people and old as well at Lindbrook Hall last Saturday night.

The young people of Weslake district attended a birthday party put on by Bobbie Moens. Crepe paper hats were passed around to each person which caused some excitement. A delicious lunch was served by Mrs. Moens with the assistance of a few girls.

Steele Murdock is home on furlough visiting old friends, and looking much better. He has been instructing in the RCAF.

APPLES FOR EVERYBODY

As close as can be reckoned by the responsible department, there should be at least 5,000,000 bushels of apples for fresh consumption in Canada for 1944-45, or about 33 pounds per head of population, against an average of 30 pounds in the two years just before the war. The prospect is given as good for a healthy demand at or close to ceiling prices for best varieties and packs. There were short crops in 1940, 1941, 1942 but the near normal crop now predicted for 1944 is estimated at about 12,865,000 bushels.

ASK MR. [illegible]LEY, HE KNOWS!
We C[illegible] Stop Pumping Now

(CONTRIBUTED)

AT THE BEGINNING of the century, two persons were needed to play a pipe-organ. The organist was at the key-board and someone else was at the pump handle. And all the years of practise, all the skill of the musician's fingers came to naught when the man at the pump stopped pumping.

In Europe today thousands of Canadians are playing a different kind of music. They are playing it well with canon and guns. Their performance is a thrill for a listening world, a display of masterful technique developed through years of hard practise. Just as the organist of olden days depended on the youth at the pump, our troops depend on us at home to keep them going.

Victory Loans, successfully conducted during the past three years, have been vital to the training of our armed forces. But they are not enough. One hour's pumping of the old organ could not keep the organist playing for one hour and a quarter. Similarly, just so long as the Canadian invasion forces are playing their part on European soil we must do ours here. We can't stop pumping now.

Mr. A. J. H. McCauley, Unit Organizer for the Tofield V. L. area, played the organ in the United Church, Tofield, for over 30 years.

U.F.W.A. NOTES

At the March meeting of the U.F.W.A. which was held at the home of Mrs. Morton, a donation of ten dollars was voted to the Tofield Red Cross branch.

A fairly large number of members and visitors met at Mrs. Biglands for the April meeting.

The Roll Call: "My most Embarrassing Moment" was quite entertaining.

Mrs. C. Erickson gave a paper on "Canada's Immigration Policy" which was much enjoyed. A summer conference was discussed and it was agreed that if other Constituency locals were willing, this should take place in Edmonton simultaneously with those of other constituencies, in the month of June.

The sum of $5.00 was donated to the Tofield Community League.

Members agreed to make quilt blocks for another Red Cross quilt. The executive would be glad to have these blocks turned in at the May meeting, which is to be held at the home of Mrs. Charles Kallal, on the second Thursday, May 11th.

QUEEN BEE LOSSES

Several reports were received last year of losses of queen bees, either shortly after having been placed in the hives or some weeks later.

A survey of the queen bee situation is being made by the Apiculture Branch, and all dead queens should be sent in for examination to W. G. leMaistre, Provincial Apiarist, Department of Agriculture, Edmonton. When mailing the dead queen, the name and address of the sender and the name and address of the supplier of the packages should be given. If the cause of death can be determined the shipper will be notified and steps can then be taken to ensure improvement of the quality of queens shipped in packages.

Alberta was not the only province last year in which complaints about the quality of queen bees were made. Breeders are very anxious to improve this condition but this is not possible unless an examination of the dead queens is undertaken and the breeders advised of the cause of death.

MODIFIED PROCEDURE TO PROVIDE JOB PERMITS TO WORKERS LIVING OUTSIDE A CITY

Arthur MacNamara, Director of National Selective Service, announces revisions to simplify the procedure for the issue of permits to seek and enter employment, in the case of workers living in a municipality where there is no Employment and Selective Service Office. This special procedure applies to persons who would be put to more than 80c expense in travelling to and from home to a local employment office.

A new form has now been devised, which is available at all local Employment and Selective Service Offices, and which will also be available through local Post Offices. The worker living in a rural district or in a town without an Employment and Selective Service Office may, even without a permit seek employment in the municipality in which he resides, providing that he has already applied for a Selective Service permit on the new form N.S.S. 102-A. An employer in his municipality may engage the worker who has applied for a permit on this form for a period of up to 7 days, but after that time the employee to continue on the job must have secured his permit to work from Selective Service in the regular manner.

The new form, in addition to being an application for a job permit, covers the standing of male applicants in regard to Mobilization Regulations.

Mr. MacNamara pointed out that the purpose of the new form is to facilitate acceptance of employment by residents of rural districts and small towns, while still maintaining the necessary wartime control over applicants living in such localities.

An interesting survey as of January 15, 1944, made by the Bureau of Statistics showed a further increase in rates of wages paid to farm workers. All provinces showed the upswing, both for hired help by day and by the month. For day help with board, it averaged $2.45 in January as compared with $2.02 in January, 1943. By the month it was $49.44 as against $40.85. Daily, without board, showed rate of $3.32 as against $2.79, monthly went from $61.76 a year ago to $72.49 this January.

FEATHER PULLING AND CANNIBALISM IN POULTRY

This vicious habit often causes severe loss in the laying flock and when firmly established is difficult to bring under control. Many birds are picked until killed, resulting not only in the loss of the birds, but loss also of potential production.

The trouble usually develops in a flock of pullets that has just been removed from the range to the laying house. The change from range to house conditions has been too abrupt. Continue with the same feed as used on the range. Open windows wide and approach range conditions as closely as possible. Do not overcrowd. Allow 3½ square feet of floor space for Leghorns and 4 sq. feet for heavy breeds. There is reason to believe that overheating and overcrowding during the brooding and rearing period is responsible for this trouble in some flocks.

As soon as picking is noticed, immediate steps must be taken to apply corrective measures. Otherwise the attack may quickly get out of control and complicate the problem. C. W. Traves, Poultry Commissioner, recommends prompt removal of injured birds from the flock. The damaged birds can be kept together without further injury.

Figures have been released on patients in Canadian hospitals. From 1939 to 1942 the number of patients in our public hospitals increased by 230,783 or 27 per cent; in mental institutions 3,386 or 6 per cent. In private hospitals the increase was 11,460 or 31 per cent. Tuberculosis Sanatoria patients were more by 2,572 or 13 per cent. Figures show that average length of stay in public hospitals was 12.2 days, 16.6 days in private, 226 days for tuberculosis sanatoria and five to six years in mental institutions.

CREEP FEEDING OF YOUNG STOCK

(Experimental Farms News)

Much money is lost as a result of retarded growth in young live stock. For the best development of any animal, the most economical plan is continual normal growth. Foals, calves, lambs or pigs, thrive better as a result of the extra trouble and feed supplied in a creep, where older stock cannot reach it, says E. Van Nice, Dominion Experimental Station, Scott, Sask.

It is a radical change from a milk diet to a raw grain ration. The more gradual the change is made the better. Young pigs will start eating quite young if they have an opportunity to nibble at a special, easily digested dry meal mixture as often as they like. At about four weeks of age they often find their mother's milk reduced in quantity just when they need an increased ration. If they are in pens or dry lots, the only other source of feed may be at the mother's trough, which is not satisfactory. It is at this time that creep feeding of a special meal mixture is particularly desirable.

Foals, calves and lambs may be on pasture with their dams, and actually lose weight without the knowledge of the owner for during the heat of summer, the pasture often becomes dry and short. At the Dominion Experimental Station at Scott, Sask., creep feeding of young stock has proved to be quite beneficial and is recommended for helping the young stock over the most critical part of their lives and in turn increasing net profits to the owner.

The self feeder is a satisfactory method of feeding in all cases as the

CANADA SEEKS BEEF CONTRACT

Possibility that Canada may conclude a large beef contract with Britain has developed. Due to the foreign policy of Argentina, Canada and the United States may take over the shipment of beef to the United Kingdom. Consideration is being given to sanction against the Argentine, which supplies Britain with the major portion of imported beef. Outside of that possibility, increased needs of armed forces in Britain may result in considerable beef purchases from Canada. While this might mean resumption of meat rationing [illegible] would mean a [illegible] market for Canadian beef [illegible] Gardiner, Minister of Agriculture is trying to negotiate a contract that will run for several years, thus protecting the cattle raisers of the Dominion for a considerable period.

ALBERTA HIGHWAYS PROGRAM UNDER WAY

The first object will be the "armour plating" or laying of the final course on the section between Calgary and Crossfield. As soon as this job is finished, crews will start on the road between Edmonton and Millet.

Certain projects in the southern part of the province also are on the program but it is expected that final selections will be deferred until a survey of road conditions in all sections is made by the minister of public works, Hon. W. A. Fallow, and departmental heads. They will start next week on a tour of various districts to observe conditions at first hand.

ADDRESSES ON THE MOVE . . .

This Mail has PRIORITY

WHEN a man is wounded in action or seriously ill, he is rushed through field and base hospitals with all possible speed, to the place where most effective treatment can be given. Because of this rapid movement, his mail may not "catch up" for some time, yet, if ever he longed for a letter from home, it is at such a time.

To offset possible delays, a new "Short-Cut" mail service has been put into effect. A Priority Casualty Card is filled in and rushed by Air Mail to his friends or relatives with instructions to add the words "In Hospital" to the unit address they usually use.

Letters mailed from Canada bearing the words "In Hospital" are routed direct to the records office in the United Kingdom or the Central Mediterranean Force, as the case may be. They are given preference in transport, whether sent by Air Mail or regular mail. Thus they will reach the addressee faster than ever before.

It is inevitable that in tracing men who have been moved, or wounded, some delays occur. But you can rest assured everything that can mean speedier deliveries of letters to your men is being well and thoroughly done—and will be done.

When you get a Priority Casualty Card be sure the words "In Hospital" are added to the regular unit address when writing overseas.

Tofield Community League

The regular luncheon meeting of the Community League was held in the Royal Alex Hotel, Wednesday night, April 26. A very excellent meal was served by our jovial friend, Mr. Bray. The attendance wasn't as large as usual but some very healthy discussions were enjoyed and some important views were exchanged.

In the opening remarks the Chairman pointed out that although the League had only been in existence for a short time it had accomplished considerable. There is now over $500 in the bank toward building a Hall. The ugly sight of an empty building on our main street has been changed and the premises will be occupied in the near future. Considerable work has been done by our Hospital Committee in interviewing committee's from the outlying towns and the Health Department in Edmonton, with a view to planning the best method and place for the erection of a hospital for Tofield and the district. He pointed out that these things can only be achieved by getting together in an organization of this kind and exchanging views and taking action, and urged that all members make it a point to attend the meetings and keep the spirit alive so that our Town may become a real centre of activity, so that we can call it the best town along the line.

A committee was appointed to interview a group from Ryley for the purpose of outlining an area that could maintain a hospital so that all costs could be estimated. It was then moved that we invite Mr. Maxwell, Supervisor of Municipal hospitals, to speak on the evening of Wednesday, May 10th, in the Variety Theatre and detail the size of Hospital needed, its initial cost and its maintenance costs, and to answer all questions in regard to this matter. It is hoped that everyone interested will attend this meeting.

The coming calf show was discussed and further information required before definite action and time for show is set. It was noted that the last Free Moving Pictures in town was well attended and it is hoped that the next one will receive the same support. These are good pictures and are well worth your while attending.

It was suggested that some action be taken in regard to the Mobile to having it stop in Tofield, but no action was taken as it was thought that the Local Red Cross may have been planning to sponsor it here. If so, the Community League would assist them in any way that they may see fit to have them act.

The next luncheon meeting to be held on May 31st will be in the form of an entertainment for all men of the armed forces in the Tofield District who may be home on leave, invalided home or for any other reason be in the district on that date. If you know of any of the boys that will be home on that date kindly let our very good friend and member, Mr. A. B. Clutterham, know about it, and he will see that an invitation is extended.

A unanimous vote of thanks was tendered the Town Council for their thoughtfulness and action in connection with the cemetery. A splendid job of beautification is being done and favorable comments were heard on all sides.

Meeting adjourned.

Every man in his squadron is ready! Every man in the forces of sea and land and air is ready — waiting for the last, BIG PUSH!

ARE YOU? There are some Canadians who aren't! Some men and women who are not taking their full part in the struggle for freedom — who haven't even bought as many Victory Bonds as they possibly can. Are you one of them? It's not too late! Zero hour is near, but there's still time to get in the fight!

Much Business Done At Saturday's M.D. Mtg.

Mercury and Holden Herald by which the M.D. of Beaver resident ratepayers receive either one of the papers was discussed. At the January meeting the eastern boundary fixed for the Tofield Mercury was a line running north and south through the middle of townships 48, 49, 50, 51. Since that time quite a number of the ratepayers in the east half of these townships requested the Tofield paper and a few weeks ago the whole of these townships with the exception of the east half of township 48 was added to the Mercury list. The Holden Herald desired the east half of these townships and this was allowed them. However the way was left open for individual ratepayers in these townships to receive the paper of their choice by making their wishes known.

Mr. Giebelhaus pointed out that as the council had granted a request for money to be used in connection with the building of a ladies' rest room in Viking that other towns within the boundaries of the Municipality would likely at some future date ask for a like amount, and he asked the council to set a standard for rest rooms and a request not granted unless this standard was maintained, the meeting decided that a building be of good construction at a cost of $500. or more, to be heated and lighted and kept in a sanitary condition by the town in which it [illegible]

C.N.R. Station Centre Of Interest Wednesday

Wednesday morning the C.N.R. station "went rural". The clicketyclick-click of the telegraph instruments had a tenor of peeps and a base hum that was quite unusual. We hope the coming summer season will be just right because there were 80 boxes with approximately 10,000 bees in each box. This number, says Mr. Chandler to whom the bees were consigned, will build up to a much larger number during the summer and given a favorable season will produce much honey. The shipment on Wednesday was about a third of the total number expected this season.

Express shipments of day old chicks is now an old story but to round out the rural sound effects, the humming of bees was accompanied by the peep, peep, peep, of many day old chicks and no doubt in due course many of these will swell egg shipments to Britain.

HASTINGS LAKE

So we must all be dead in this part of the woods only we refuse to lay down? Well, now, just because you don't hear from us . . . .

We have further word of Gordon Tough from Sgt. George Campion, who writes: "We were in .... and were holding a position in a big building we had just captured. Gordon was across the street when he got hit. I rushed over but he was killed instantly. He was one of the best soldiers and fighters I ever saw, he wasn't afraid of anything. This happened on December 21st and he was buried on Christmas day. I wasn't able to be at his funeral but I visited his grave a good many times. The cemetery is fixed up very neatly. It is needless to tell you how I miss him as you know how long we've been pals. No one could ever have been a truer and better pal than he was. It doesn't seem fair somehow. There was seldom a day passed without him mentioning either his wife or baby. He had so much to live for and he had to go instead of me." In conclusion and of himself, George says simply, "I have been awarded the M.M. Please write as often as you can."

Mr. Hand who was mentioned in the last Mercury, appears to be making favorable recovery. A case where malnutrition and severe living conditions are undoubtedly contributing factors. However if we know the Irish, and Mr. Hand in particular, there is sufficient of that indomitable spirit to carry on yet awhile.

Mr. Collins suffered what appears to be a paralytic stroke and was taken to Edmonton, but at time of writing his condition is unknown.

A nice little crowd turned out and enjoyed themselves at the whist drive and dance last Friday evening, sponsored jointly by Miss...... and Miss ...... for the benefit of the overseas cigarette fund. Special mention to Mr. Campion for his assistance and to George Bruce and Ben Tiedeman, the music makers.

We are pleased to see Steve Tough very much in circulation again after his recent operation.

Mr. Heaver was a recent visitor to Edmonton, attending the funeral of his brother.

Mrs. Llewellyn and two boys, Ronald and Bobby, have taken up residence for the time being near the school. Mr. Llewellyn is with the army overseas.

Dorothy Peterson is at present back in the old home town, Cereal, and wondering how it could have changed so much.

Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Vice and Jack were visitors at the parental home last Sunday.

Should a member of the ever increasing sheep-raising fraternity of this fair district happen to call on you and while enjoying the hospitality of your fireside, fall asleep, do not be too harsh in your judgement. You see—well— with all the extra lambs to count just now and the nights not being any too long, things may be a little behind. After all, there's nothing like a little nap to check the count and see if the woollies are all there.

WHITE SCOURS IN CALVES

(Experimental Farms News)

While scours in calves is a condition most common in the spring and is in many cases a reflection of the winter feeding of the dam, states George W. Muir, Dominion Animal Husbandman, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa. If the ration of the dam has been lacking in green feed, such as well-cured green-coloured hay or good quality green-coloured silage, there will have been a shortage of Vitamin A. This is usually accentuated at the end of a long winter feeding period since the Vitamin A stored in the liver from the green grass eaten the previous summer will have been pretty well used up. As a result, the calves are born lacking fortification with Vitamin A, the anti-infective vitamin, and if not carefully handled are liable to come down with white scours.

The first milk of the dam is usually particularly well fortified with Vitamin A and also with anti-bodies both of which assist in the fight against white scours if the latter should develop. It is good practice to see that the calf gets a good, big feed of the colostrum or first milk drawn from the cow. Next, let the calf rest without further feeding for about 24 hours to give time for the colostrum to take effect. Then when feeding is begun continue with its own dam's milk in very small quantities two or preferably three times a day, gradually increasing the amount if the calf continues to do normally. If the calf shows signs of scours in spite of these precaution, reduce the amount of milk fed at once to a minimum and give a mild laxative such as mineral oil, castor oil or milk of magnesia. Follow this up with very small amounts of fresh warm milk to which has been added a little lime water. Avoid overfeeding at this time. Keep the calves in clean, warm, well-ventilated pens and apply covers to keep the body warm if necessary. Isolate any sick calves from the healthy ones and provide good nursing and stimulants where needed. When handled in this way, very few calves are lost. WORLD OF WHEAT

By H. G. L. Strange

THE WAR NOT YET WON

This war is far from won, no matter what some may say. In the spring of 1918 the odds were heavily in favour of the Germans winning the last war, and yet by November the Germans were beaten.

Wars are won with great difficulty but can easily and quickly be lost. Wars have often been lost from the lack of a few extra men, some extra equipment, munitions or guns. The only assurance of victory is to have more men, more and better weapons and equipment than the enemy.

Then, too, with my own eyes I have seen young men killed in battle because they did not have at hand sufficient munitions.

To train, equip and transport manpower, to manufacture munitions and to make them available to fighting men costs money and lots of it. The Government depends on the sale of Victory Bonds for a considerable part of the money it needs.

As I see it, it is not a mere privilege that we have to buy Victory Bonds, it is a sheer undeniable high duty and responsibility we must assume in order to supply the Government with sufficient money to prevent unnecessary loss of life, and to ensure the winning of battles and of the war. Only by winning the war can we escape being enslaved by our enemies. Only by winning the war can we be assured of a free and bright future for ourselves and for our children.

SHRUBS

"Ornamental Shrubs and Small Trees for the Canadian Prairies" is the title of a new bulletin just published by Line Elevators Farm Service. The author of this bulletin is Dr. S. W. Edgecombe, Associate Professor of Horticulture, University of Manitoba. It is a very attractive publication containing descriptions of over a hundred shrubs and it is beautifully illustrated.

Farmyards and school grounds in the Prairie Provinces are, too often, drab indeed. Shrub plantations are not difficult to establish and require comparatively little labour to maintain. This new bulletin includes the essential information on planting and care of shrubs and, also, on planning the shrubbery. The reader can, therefore, make an intelligent selection, and secure information on landscape design as well as on care and maintenance. A list of commercial nurseries is, also, included.

Copies of the bulletin may be obtained from Line Elevator grain buyers or from Line Elevators Farm Service, 763 Grain Exchange Building, Winnipeg, or 505 Herald Building, Calgary. The distribution is free to farmers, country school students and [illegible] teachers. This will be a very valuable addition to the parcels of agricultural literature which go from Line Elevators Farm Service to country schools almost every day.

Cost of administering the price ceiling, including all expenses connected with rationing, is approximately $1.25 per year for each person in Canada, or about 10c per month, said W. A. Congdon of the W.P.T.B.

RURAL HOUSING

Ottawa — A building program to provide Canadian farmers and farm laborers with an average of 9,400 new houses annually for twenty years at an estimated total cost of $282,000,000 it recommended by the Report on Housing and Community Planning prepared by the Committee on Reconstruction.

The Committee recommends replacing 100,000 farm houses which are in such bad condition that it is better economy to replace them than to repair them. In addition it calls for the erection of 25,000 new farm dwellings to house farm families who are now sharing homes with other families.

Another 63,000 farm homes are needed to replace those which become obsolete and run down as time goes on.

It is recommended that this total of 188,000 new farm houses be regarded as a minimum target, and that the building of them be spread over a twenty-year period.

The Report suggests setting up a special rural division of the National Housing Administration, or a Farm Housing Advisory Committee, in the Department of Agriculture to co-ordinate farm housing with other policies affecting land utilization, production credit, marketing arrangement, trade and price policies, and farm labor policy.

A proposed Farm Improvement Plan could be set up to provide for government subsidies on interest or on capital, and to grant long-term loans at low interest rate. It is also recommended that the Government pay mortgage insurance instead of the farmer.

Other recommendations include the erection of farm laborers' cottages and community centres, and the donation by the Federal government of electrical, plumbing, heating and refrigeration equipment to farm housing projects in return for the labor of installation.

Heel Fly Campaign Gains Momentum

From the southern boundary of Alberta to the northern fringe of settlement a great army of stockmen are attacking our most destructive cattle parasite. So enthusiastic is this attempt to destroy the heel fly says J. L. Eaglesham, Supervisor of Pest Control, that a considerable improvement in Alberta's live stock industry is already assured. This is the second season of the province-wide campaign to improve the milk, beef and leather situation by destroying warble grubs. The momentum that this campaign has achieved is encouraging. Its success is ample proof of its value.

The unthrifty condition of grubby cattle has been noted by feeders for many years. Summer gadding of cattle on pasture has been accepted as a necessary affliction for generations. Heavy losses in meat and hide values and in milk production were borne stoically by producers because we did not realize either the extent of the losses involved or the effectiveness and the simplicity of the treatment necessary to overcome these losses.

Today, we know that the average loss in Alberta due to uncontrolled heel fly activity is between $5.00 and $10.00 per head. We know that to save these losses costs [illegible] 5c per head. Stock raisers are now determined that they will dispose of this pest and they are doing it on a grand scale.

Producers who are treating their cattle or warbles hope that all their neighbours will also get out and treat theirs. It is known that individual effort is worthwhile, but community effort is preferable since it makes the control easier and much more permanent.

April is the month for the final effort to destroy the 1944 heel fly crop. If this month is allowed to pass without giving the stock the necessary treatment they will be bothered throughout the summer. If, on the other hand, proper treatment is applied to cattle now a fly free season may be enjoyed and maximum gains produced.

FIRST FLIGHT THRILLS PIONEER MEDICAL MAN

Winnipeg, May 2—First flight at 80 was a thrilling experience for Dr. Thomas Henry Lougheed, pioneer medical man of western Canada, who travelled to Winnipeg from Vancouver by Trans-Canada Air Lines. When he taught school at Lower Fort Garry more than 60 years ago, there wasn't even a railroad across the plains and mountains. Between 1885 and 1928, when he retired and went to live at the Pacific Coast, Dr. Lougheed practised medicine at Glenboro, Man., and Cypress River. His wife died a year ago and now he has come to live with his son, Dr. M. R. Lougheed, Medical Health Officer for the City of Winnipeg.

British Isles Offer Largest Food Market

Lennoxville, Que., May 2—"Those of us in Canada who are interested in agriculture or in the handling of its products for export generally look upon the British Isles as the world's largest market for foodstuffs and the home of high class purebred livestock," said D. M. Johnson of the Canadian National Railways department of colonization and agriculture, addressing the members of the Eastern Townships Settlement Society at a dinner meeting. The prosperity of Canada, he added, largely depended on the ability of [illegible] farmers to carry on their operations in a husband-like manner and to sell what they produced at a remunerative price on the home and export markets.

ARGENTINE GOVERNMENT TAKES OVER ELEVATORS

The announcement was made last week-end that the government of Argentina has taken over all grain elevators in that country and will operate the same as a public utility under the direction of the Argentina wheat board. Most of the terminal elevators in the great grain ports are, however, privately owned. Alberta Wheat Pool Budget.

We Must See The Job Through

There is no letting up on the fighting fronts. Action increases day by day. But our men there are conscious of their job—to carry on until victory is won. They will finish the job, and we must help them. Our job is an easy one compared to theirs.

We Must Buy More VICTORY BONDS

Yes, we bought bonds before of course we did. The people of Tofield and district have done a good job on every occasion on which they have been asked to buy bonds. We're buying bonds again. Are we buying all the bonds we can? ARE YOU BUYING ALL YOU CAN?

As long as the war lasts it is going to cost Canada money to carry on. And from now on the fighting will extend to new areas. The cost will mount higher.

THIS IS NO TIME TO REST ON THE JOB

We can't be content with what we have done. We must do more. We must keep on buying bonds until the war is won. Combined operations call for all-out action from each unit on the home front as well as on the fighting fronts. Tofield area must go all-out to support the 6th Victory Loan. This community must do its share. And this means that each individual must help.

AN UNWANTED WAR—AND GOLD—

THIS WAR HAS BEEN called quite a number of things, even in polite language. A war of nerves, a phony war, a war of surprises, but a particularly apt name would seem to be an unwanted war. It is probably true enough to say that any war is unwanted, but certainly judging by all the effort that is being made (even while battles are being waged with fierce intensity) to prevent a reoccurrence of the struggle, this war which has engulfed such a large portion of the peoples of the world was, by the democracies at least, certainly unwanted.

Among many other things which are being studied by experts and tentatively approved by the United Nations is a huge currency stabilization plan involving the fantastic sum of eight billion dollars. This fund which will be somewhat similar to one now in use by Great Britain and the United States is designed so that the currencies of the different nations may not be subject to violent fluctuations. Should any one country get into currency difficulties, the stabilization fund, which will be based upon an immense amount of gold, will go to its rescue by placing a quantity of the metal at its disposal as a sort of credit foundation. The United Kingdom, the United States, the Soviet Union and thirty or more nations including Canada, will contribute to and share the benefits of such a fund.

The surprising thing to the lay man is that gold, after being relegated to the cellar so to speak, should once more take the leading role in matters pertaining to international adjustment. The suitability of gold as a base for currency values has been debated over and over again throughout the years and while it is true that currencies are a standing (or falling) monument to the art of book-keeping, it is equally true that gold persists in working its way into the currency set-up. The truth apparently is that no matter how fantastically tall or lop-sided the financial pyramid may become, somewhere at the bottom there must be a gold or silver foundation. As far as Canada is concerned, we feel that the larger the proportion of metal there is to the note issue, the better. We also feel the currency system would be helped if there were two foundations, silver for internal use and gold for external [illegible]

When victory is assurred and peace proclaimed, and when the international stabilization plan goes into effect, what repercussions there will be to Western agriculture, no one can foretell. That there will be repercussions, no one doubts, in fact it is intended that there should be . . . beneficial ones.

Another post war problem that experts are working upon is the marketing of Western Canada's grain crop. During the early years of the western grain growing industry there seemed to be an ever expanding market for our wheat. There was, we expect, a "carry over" in those days but if there was it was rarely mentioned outside of the grain trade. The 1914-18 conflict brought about further expansion of grain growing and while carryovers were gradually getting larger it was not until 1929-30 that gradually accumulating factors brought about a collapse of prices and lessened demand. Among these factors was the desire on the part of a number of European countries to be in a grain sense, self supporting, and in order to be so, various governments subsidized the price of domestic wheat. In quite a few European countries the price of wheat was at least twice what wheat from importing countries could have been purchased for. The proposals being now made are that when peace settlements do take place and international trading policies are laid down, that areas naturally suitable for wheat growing, supply those countries which are not. This will mean a sharp recession from high tariffs all round. But in any event, what Western Canadian farmers should know is that assuming present acreages and average yields in Western Canada are maintained, to find a market for all our surplus wheat when peace comes, after perhaps the first rush of exports, is not going to be an easy task.

WISTFUL MEMORY

My father took me by the hand
Each spring when I was small,
And I would listen breathlessly
To hear the peepers call.

And I would thrill invariably,
And often I would try
To put in words the way I felt
To hear the peepers cry.

So many years have come and gone,
But spring would not be spring,
Unless some pregnant April night
I heard the peepers sing.

No other memory of my youth
Has such a wistful strain,
Because the peepers' message said
That spring had come again.

OTTAWA NEWS LETTER

EXCHANGE FUND WILL BOOST TRADE

Canada took a leading part in the agreement to create an $8,000,000,000 international exchange stabilization fund which will be used to facilitate world trade after the war. As one of the leading export nations of the world, establishment of such a fund is most important to the Dominion. Operation of the fund should vitally assist Canada to find foreign markets for wheat and other agricultural produce as well as for manufactured products. In the past wide differences in exchange have often operated as prohibitive tariffs, slowing up sales abroad. Prime Minister King made it very clear to Parliament that the Dominion does not intend to adhere to the central exchange plan unless other barriers to export trade are removed by international action. Britain and the United States differed sharply on some aspects of the exchange agreement. Canada submitted a compromise monetary plan which proved the basis of the agreement reached by 34 United Nations.

MR. KING PRESSES POST-WAR [illegible]

Mr. King emphasized to Parliament that the Government intends to pass this session its comprehensive program of legislation designed to meet post-war problems and assure a high standard of living in the Dominion after the war. Measures to be brought before Parliament include a national housing bill; a family allowance bill, a bill to provide a floor under farm prices and a health insurance bill, if reasonable agreement can be reached between the provinces.

The housing program will include aid for building and improving farm homes and dwellings in villages and towns, as well as in the large centres of population.

The family allowance program, federally financed, will provide monthly payments to parents according to the number of dependent children of school age in the family. It will be of special assistance to those in the lower income groups. The measure to place a floor under farm prices is designed to keep agricultural prices from falling to unprofitable levels and to assure farm families a proper standard of living. Health insurance will guarantee medical and hospital services for a small annual contribution from those in lower income groups, and without charge to those who cannot pay the minimum cost.

Consideration and enactment of this, the biggest legislative program ever presented to a Canadian Parliament, means a long session, probably extending into the fall.

WHEAT SCARCITY AHEAD?

Dean F. C. Cronkite of the University of Saskatchewan looks for cereal shortages in less than four or five years. The dean is chairman of the Saskatchewan Reconstruction Council. Testifying before the House of Commons Reconstruction Committee he said that according to information he had received, the production of industrial alcohol would be discontinued after about six months. The use of wheat for alcohol manufacture was due to a war emergency condition and an insufficient supply of molasses. To compete with molasses for the manufacture of alcohol the price must be from 20 to 25 cents a bushel. The dean said wheat should be used for food and instead of cereal surpluses there will be shortages in less than four or five years. —Wheat Pool Budget.

LONDON: A new British plan for post-war mass production of pre-fabricated houses will not only provide 4,000,000 extra homes for Britons but will aid aircraft firms, now turning out thousands of bombers and fighters, in their conversion to peace-time manufacture. Blueprinted by 120 large firms, representing five major British industries—aircraft plywood, steel tubing, light alloys, and iron and steel—the scheme will benefit from war-learned lessons in aircraft construction and design. For example, Britain, unused to central heating, will have in its new houses heating and insulating devices borrowed straight from its fighting planes. To avoid standardization five or six basic designs have been prepared. Pre-fabricated houses, according to engineers, architects, and housewives, will make possible great advances in low cost housing, and less than 1,000 man-hours will be needed to build and assemble one of the ready-made homes. This compares with the average of 2,200 man-hours now needed to build an ordinary dwelling.

Recently compiled figures indicate that retail price of beef in the past year contributed half a point to the total increase of two points in the cost of living index, that is from February 1943 to February 1944.

Present Forest Fire Danger

A warning to the people of Alberta regarding the present serious fire danger in the province, has been issued by the Director of Forestry, Mr. T. F. Blefgen.

Mr. Blefgen in an interview stated that most parts of Alberta this spring are in a condition which necessitates every possible care being taken to guard against fire.

The snowfall during the past winter was much lighter than usual, and in most districts there has been practically no rain since the snow disappeared.

Warm sunny days and drying winds have now created a fire hazard of such a nature that a little carelessness, or failure to appreciate the present danger, may well start a conflagration. Such conflagration would entail considerable expense. Labour, which at present is so urgently needed elsewhere, would have to be immediately secured for fire-fighting purposes. It would also entail the loss of valuable timber—more valuable now in this period of national need than it ever was before, and urgently needed for the general war effort. It is needed as well for the building of many new homes and for other forms of construction which have been deferred until victory is won, at which time labour, together with the materials so badly needed by labour, will once again become available.

This is not the total price which would have to be paid for a major fire just now. With such a conflagration under way in the present dry condition of both bush and park lands, losses would include destruction of buildings, stock and possibly human life.

It is easy therefore to understand that until a generous downpour of rain over a wide area not only eliminates the present danger but brings a welcome return of green vegetation, it will be found advisable to postpone the burning of brush, slash and other debris. This is one occasion when putting off a thing which can be done today, even if it costs a little more by such delay, will ensure the protection of buildings, homes and the great forested areas of this province.

It is urgently pointed out that more than usual care should, of course, be taken in the matter of discarding cigarettes, matches and other lighted material before they are properly put out. Safeguarding of camp or other fires also is vitally necessary.

Protection of the forests is a most urgently needed war effort. This protection can so easily be given now by all classes of Alberta citizens of either sex or of any age.

The Columbia Potato Growers Association on Lulu Island in British Columbia, assisted by officials of the Dominion Department of Agriculture, have been holding potato crop competitions for the past years. The 1943 event brought the climax with Leslie Gilmore of Steveston, B.C., getting what is considerd the highest yield per acre ever obtained in Canada, a yield of a little over 900 bushels per acre out of which 883 bushels were marketable grades. They were "Netted Gems" for which variety the yield was a world's record.

Seeding Forage Crops Without A Nurse Crop

(Experimental Farms News)

Seeding grasses and legumes without a nurse crop will result in better catches than if a nurse crop is used. In many cases, the so-called nurse crop proves a robber crop because the small grass and legume seedlings cannot compete for available soil moisture and fertility with the more vigorous growing cereal nurse crop, says G. E. DeLong, Dominion Experimental Station, Lacombe, Alta.

It is not a wise policy to use a so-called nurse crop when sowing down with high priced seed such as alfalfa where the cost of seed per acre may amount to three dollars. Where such high priced seed is used, the best plan to follow in areas where soil and climatic conditions are similar to Central Alberta is to sow the seed during June without a nurse crop.

It is suggested that the land be disced and harrowed as early in the spring as possible and again about the middle of May to promote weed seed germination. This land should be plowed during the last week in May to bury all weeds and worked down at once like a garden and harrowed every few days until the seed is sown the second or third week of June. Weeds which germinate along with the legume should be clipped back with a mower after they have attained six or eight inches in height. By that time, alfalfa or clover seedlings will be big enough that they will not be destroyed by tramping or by the traction of the mower wheels.

These recommendations apply to the park belt and the grey wooded soil area of Alberta and where soil drifting is not a problem. On light soil subject to drifting and in marginal and open prairie country both grass and legume seed can be seeded in stubble or other trash cover either in the late fall after freeze up or in the early spring. The early spring seedings are usually better than those made later in the growing season.

—V—

Though hampered by a late season United States farmers have put in an enormous acreage of barley. The only worry about this crop is that it was seeded quite late and may be damaged by hot July weather.

CHILDREN TO HAVE MORE CLOTHING

Edmonton, May 1—Increased production of children's clothing, flannelette and shoes, is directed by the Wartime Prices and Trade Board, according to Mrs. Frank J. Conroy, regional chairman of the Consumer Branch. Output of children's underwear has been increased over pre-war years, production of Saxony flannelette is also increased, and manufacture of children's shoes is at a new high.

POISON GOPHERS NOW

Farmers of Alberta suffer heavy losses each year from damage by the common gopher. Although most farmers recognize this and take steps to avoid loss many fail to use gopher poison at all or use it too late for best results.

Gophers should be poisoned in April if at all possible, advises J. L. Eaglesham, Supervisor of Pest Control. Whether a prepared poison or a homemade formula is used it should be made use of now for best results. Gophers have recently emerged from their winter quarters and in about a month each female will have a family of six or eight offspring. If poisoning is delayed until that time much more control work will be required.

It w[illegible] gophers take poisoned grain much more readily now than later when more green vegetation is available. In order to save [illegible] farmers will commence control operations [illegible] delay.

ODDS & ENDS

Odds and ends: On charges that war materials are going to Spain, the Prime Minister said the 1943 exports there were valued at only $160,021, mainly short fibre asbestos and asbestos waste. Trans-Canada Air lines showed a 34 per cent passenger increase last year, with airmail up 60 per cent. 28,486,980 tons of coal were imported into Quebec and Ontario from the U.S.A. and Great Britain last year, with $614,446 being paid in subsidies in the past two years to those importing fuel from Great Britain into those two provinces. This country exported to Russia in February of this year merchandise valued at $4,890,000 as against $964,000 same month year before, to Turkey $2,896,000 as against nil.

There is a tremendous demand for [illegible] and [illegible] graduates for war industries and essential civilian services, as shown by an analysis from the Department of Labour's Wartime Bureau of Technical Personnel. In January and February this year the Bureau got more [illegible] for technically trained persons than at any time since November, 1942. There are five vacancies for every three available, although 31,000 persons so listed are now engaged in essential work. A [illegible] of the 1944 [illegible] have already been spoken for by Army, Navy and Air Force.

Canadian farms showed fine increases in all types of livestock, the official survey of December 1, 1943 showed. Cattle on farms were up by 672,500 head or 7.6 per cent. Saskatchewan had the highest increase, Ontario showing little. There were [illegible] milk cows in the country at the above date. There was a quarter million [illegible] increase in sheep, all benefiting in this regard except British Columbia, while Saskatchewan [illegible] of 127.9 per cent was [illegible]. Hogs went sky-high as to [illegible] a record of 42 per cent [illegible] head, an increase [illegible] over 1942. The population of hens and chickens (57,512,000) was up [illegible] 7,771,200 birds. Saskatchewan and Nova Scotia lead [illegible] per cent increases.

This and that: Volunteer workers at six hundred local ration boards distribute 11,000,000 new ration books. Savings deposits in our chartered banks touched a new all-time high end of last February with $2,121,821,000 as against $1,795,161,000 same period year ago. Things are holding up: 80,000 pairs of police-type suspenders are being released from military stores for civilian use; 20,000 of these will go back to be cut down to the narrower size.

IT'S PLAIN HORSE SENSE TO PUT VICTORY FIRST!

● Every Canadian wants this war over—and the sooner the better. Every Canadian wants to see the fight taken to the enemy's very door; to see war wiped off the map of the world forever.

It's good, ordinary horse sense that this won't be accomplished until everyone on the home front does his full part.

Canadian soldiers are fighting with courage and self-sacrifice, but this alone will not win the war. War demands the support of us at home. What are you doing about it?

Put some of that horse sense we Canadians talk about to work. Be smart. Buy Victory Bonds.

LAKESHORE

Regular meeting of the Lakeshore War Workers' Club was held last Thursday at Mrs. Francis' home, and in spite of the spring work, was well attended. Work was done on the quilts and yarn wound before the business meeting was held. Donations to the Red Cross, Milk for Britain and Salvation Army funds were made, the club thus keeping up its good work though there is not much time these days for sewing and knitting. As it is now possible for certain kinds of parcels to be sent to prisoners of war by someone other than next of kin, it was decided to put Frank Doon's name on our list so that he will receive parcels when the other boys do from club members. Speaking of parcels—we hope everyone has her parcel sent to the boy whose name she has. The sooner it goes the better as it may have to follow him from place to place if invasion of Europe starts before he gets it. Don't forget to hand in a slip showing value of contents and postage at the next club meeting, which will be at Mrs. Eaton's.

Jackie Hobson is visiting with his aunt, Mrs. Seale.

Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Bethel have moved to the house at the East gate of the reserve. Melvin is employed as range rider for this season.

COARSE GRAIN PRICES

The equalization payment of 10 cents a bushel for oats and 15 cents for barley which is in effect this year, is based on prospective premiums on sales of those grains to the United States. Whether or not the present system of paying such premiums at the time of delivery to the elevator will be continued next year is problematical. However, there is every reason to believe that the United States will continue to take a substantial volume of Canadian oats and barley during the next crop year, paying for the same higher prices than those prevailing in Canada.

Festival Concert Much Enjoyed

The Festival Concert presented by the pupils of Tofield and Ingram schools at the Variety Theatre on Friday night last was exceptionally good. The hall was crowded and all were loud in their praises of the different numbers.

A. Bigland acted as chairman.

Commencing with "Oh Canada," the program got underway with a nicely rendered chorus by the pupils of room two which was followed by a recitation by Marian Kleinschroth of Ingram. A piano duet by Cathy Currie and Joan Webb, a military march was much enjoyed.

Room One Tofield, then presented "Hansel and Gretel" a fairy tale in the form of a play. This was much enjoyed, the youngsters playing their parts very well.

The Rhythm band, a smart looking aggregation then rendered two numbers and an encore. This band had to be heard and seen to be appreciated.

The tap dance by Marie Spence, Tofield, was received with much favor and in a later number a Spanish Tango, Miss Spence was given an enthusiastic encore.

An action song by room 3 Tofield was well received and was followed by the Tonette Band. This too had to be heard and seen to be appreciated. An action song by pupils of Ingram school was nicely rendered and a quartette by four young Tofield students was well received. A recitation by Jean Kleinschroth, Ingram, was much enjoyed and a violin solo by Shirley Stinson was very well rendered and heartily applauded.

The play "Airman's Forty-Eight" by the Tofield High School was perhaps the highlight of the program. This was a comedy and was presented with a zip and snap rarely seen in purely amateur productions.

A vocal duet by Helen Bach and Mary Neufeld of Ingram was nicely rendered as was also a solo by Gordon Bach of the same school.

A very enjoyable quartette was given by Betty Stinson, Margaret Dodds, Joyce Wilton and Marie Spence, this being followed by a "Spring Dance" by room 3, Tofield. This was really well performed. It was a Maypole type dance, was quite lengthy and we did not see a single mis-step.

The program came to an end with a well rendered and chosen chorus by the Tofield High School and the singing of the National Anthem.

KETCHAMOOT

Mothers' Day services will be held next Sunday, May 14th. A special program is being arranged. Let's show our appreciation by attending the services at 2 p.m.

Misses Gladys McLennan and Gladys Coombes, Harvey McGinitie and Adolph Tollofson were guests of the Sekulis family Sunday afternoon.

Local Victory Loan Total Still Climbing

The local Victory Loan total is, due to the enthusiastic work of the salesmen and willingness of the public to buy, still climbing.

Thursday afternoon with two more days to go there were 261 applications and $78,700.00 worth of bonds sold. In the last loan the Tofield area went over the top in a whirl wind finish and it is more than likely the end of the loan will see the pennant flying on the flag on main street.

NATIONAL FIGURES

Nationally by Tuesday night total bond sales had reached $1,010,263,600, about 31 million above the figure for the corresponding day last year.

May Snow Storm Boon To Crops

After an exceptionally dry spring during which we experienced quite a number of high winds, snow fell over Central Alberta Tuesday night. The amount of snow falling varied from a trace to four or five inches. While cold weather accompanied the snow, several degrees of frost occurring Wednesday night, farmers generally welcomed the snow as it will provide much needed moisture for the coming crop.

Ernie Rogers Passes On

The community was shocked and grieved Tuesday morning to hear that E.W. (Ernie) Rogers had passed away during the night, being 66 years of age. While during the past year he had been unwell on occasions, quite recently he felt much better and no concern whatsoever was felt concerning his health. He was at his place of business as usual on Monday and retired as usual Monday night. About 2:00 a.m. Mrs. Rogers was awakened and alarmed and a short time after, Ernie breathed his last.

Living quietly and unostentatiously, the departed has been a familiar figure in the store at Tofield for many years. He rarely was absent from his place of business and had a pleasant word for all those who met him. In a quiet, unassuming way he was very popular and his familiar figure will be missed for some long time. He was a veteran of the Great War, going overseas in 1916.

He leaves to mourn his loss, a loving wife and one daughter, Muriel; also two brothers Harry, of Tofield and Walter of Grannum.

The funeral is to be held today, Thursday, service being held at the United Church, interment taking place at the Tofield cemetery.

M.D. OF BEAVER COUNCIL MET WEDNESDAY

The M.D. of Beaver Council met on Wednesday, May 10th instead of as previously announced, Friday, May 12th. The reason for the change of date was that Mr. Ritchie of Dept. Public Works has to meet quite a number of councils this spring and Wednesday was the most convenient date for him to meet the M.D. Beaver Council. A general report of the meeting will appear next week.

The JADE GOD

By Mary Imlay Taylor

"So you've come back, Mark Grant?" The old lawyer swung around in his swivel-chair and looked the young man up and down with an eye as cold as a lizard's.

Mark laughed. Liberty was sending golden bubbles through his veins; it was easy to laugh.

"I behaved well, Mr. [illegible]" Mark said, his tone defying criticism, challenging; "they let me out a few months ahead of time."

"Humph!" Fosdick grunted, as he stretched out his big-veined hand to take a cigar and clip the end off. "I've no use for new-fangled notions in prisons," he remarked dryly; "hot air, that's all; a man should serve his time."

Mark's blue eyes mocked, but he kept his face. Fosdick had not offered him a cigar, nevertheless, he found a cigarette in his own pocket and lit it coolly.

"You've never been in prison, Mr. Fosdick," he said. "When you've tried it you'll be quite favorable to new-fangled notions. I've had fifteen years' experience. I know!"

Fosdick's gray face twisted into a grim smile. "I don't think I'll try it—not in your way. Let me see; how old were you when you went up?"

"Seventeen."

"Seventeen? Gosh!" The lawyer stared at him for a moment, incredulously. "I'd forgotten. A boy—and convicted of killing that old man, your uncle—to get his money, too!" he added reproachfully.

Mark's face sobered. His eyes darkened. "Convicted!" You call that travesty a fair trial?"

The old man recoiled slightly, but he steadied himself to face the young fury in Mark's glance. "It was a fair trial; I always said so; you appealed, too," he maintained his point dryly; then he put Mark's anger aside with a gesture. "I've no time to take that up. I dare say you've suffered for it."

Mark did not answer this; he had set his teeth hard to keep back the torrent of his anger. He looked over the gray little man's head, out of the window; the skyscraper commanded a glimpse of the river, the sight of water had a strangely tranquilizing effect.

His silence bothered the lawyer. He turned on him raspingly. "What d'you want, Mark?"

The young man put his hand in his pocket and drew out an old letter with Fosdick's name in the corner. He laid it on the desk.

"That says that Aunt Hurely left her money for me when I came out, and you have charge of it. I'm out, Mr Fosdick'

Fosdick glanced at the envelope without taking it up.

"I see! Yodr Aunt Hurley's money brought you here mighty quick!" he remarked grudgingly. He had never forgiven the boy for Grant Barton's death, O course he'd done it for the uncle's money. The motive was as plain as the nose on your face!" "I drew that will. Her friends advised against it, but she would have her way. She always believed in you."

"God bless her!" Mark broke out, suddenly devout For a moment he seemed to dwell on this in silence, then he said: " The will was proven, of course; you say as much in this letter."

The lawyer assented grudgingly again; it was plain that he had been among the friends who "advised against it

"It's not much," he said tartly, "about twenty thousand." This time Mark smiled amusedly.

Fosdick drummed on his desk again; then he swung his swivel chair back to its place with an air of dismissing his visitor.

"Come around tomorrow morning and I'll have the papers ready. The money's in deposit at the bank here, waiting."

Mark rose, but stopped with his hand on the back of his chair. "It's early yet, Mr. Fosdick, and I'd be glad to draw some of that money. I'm short.

The little lawyer whipped around in his chair and stared at him, then away. "The fellow's a giant!" he thought uneasily, remembering old Grant Barton's end. Money in that, too!

"I can't help it," he said testily, "there'll be formalities. Come tomorrow. The bank closes at three; we couldn't get through in time. I'm busy; good-day!"

Mark stood a moment longer, looking down at him. He saw the little man's hand shake as he grasped his pen and pretended to write. Mark knew he was afraid of the ex-convict; he threw back his head and laughed again, his laugh startling Fosdick as much as a blow; it was so hearty, so carefree, a boy's laugh.

"You seem to find it amusing, sir," he said tartly.

"I do!" Mark turned, picked up his hat, a new one, and went to the door. "Good-day, Mr. Fosdick," he said, still smiling, and went out. . . . . .

But the regular life that he had led made him fall hungry at regular intervals, by the clock; he had been hungry now for hours. The sensation was new and not without zest; it was part of his freedom. He threaded his way through the crowded streets with the awkward feeling of a recluse suddenly thrust out into the world. But the sights and sounds had an intoxicating effect; he felt like a man let loose into mad indulgence.

He had tramped miles; he was uptown before that insistent, by-the-clock hunger began to clamor again. He smiled to himself; eighty cents would not go far to appease it here. But there must be a cafe or tearoom where he could get a cup of coffee and a roll, or tea and a muffin. He remembered, in dim perspective that muffins were heavy and "filling". He had turned the corner into one of the more [illegible] streets and was passing the entrance of a fashionable clubhouse—the name was on the door over a brass knocker—when two young men suddenly emerged. Their exit was so abrupt that they nearly collided with Mark, and they both stopped short staring at him with the eagerness of men seeking a long lost acquaintance.

"Stewed!" Mark thought, and pursued his way, looking for a restaurant.

He found one at the other end of the street with a teapot on the swinging sign. It was down a few steps below the sidewalk, and, as he descended, he was surprised to find the two young clubmen at his heels. It annoyed him, as it could not annoy another man; it recalled the unforgotten days before his arrest, when he was "shadowed". He took a seat near the door and ordered his tea and muffins. The heavy things would at least assuage his hunger. But he felt resentment when he found the two young men had seized upon the table next to his and, without much pretense of eating, themselves, were unquestionably watching him drink his tea and eat his muffin.

They were both young, one big, about his own build, the other small and fat with red cheeks, and they were both fashionably and expensively dressed they had the air of idle wealth. They were evidently disputing something between themselves, and Mark got the impression that he was their chief interest. It nettled him; he hurried his food down, drank his tea and paid his bill. It left him twenty cents. As he counted his change and thrust it back into his pocket he laughed bitterly to himself. How would Fosdick like to face his night in the city with twenty cents? He was just rising from the table when his two young neighbors suddenly rose, came over, and pulling out the two empty chairs opposite, sat down, uninvited at his table.

Mark looked at them coldly, appraisingly; their effrontery began to amuse him; he was no longer minded to go, but sat still; thrusting his hands into his pockets he stared at them.

The stout young man leaned forward confidentially, his red cheeks growing redder.

"Pardon me," he said courteously, smiling across at Mark; "It's a wager—my speaking to you, I mean. If you've ever made a wager, you know how a fellow feels. I hope you don't mind our butting in this way. You see, it's all part of a bally bet I've made with my chum here."

"I see"—Mark still studied the pair. "I don't mind. In fact, I rather like it. What's the bet?"

"Oh, it's a thousand dollars, I—"

"Shut up!" Archie broke in suddenly, "you're only babbling, Ted. Let's get to business." He turned a little haughtily and faced Mark. "It's this way. My pal here has been getting into trouble with a lady, an elderly and exclusive lady, one of the smartest of the smart set; she won't have a man in her house who drinks too much, or gambles or,—" he shrugged—"you know the usual things!" Teddy was a prime favorite but she caught him gambling and then he got stewed, two of the cardinal sins. She's forbidden him the house, and he's sore. There's going to be an exclusive afternoon today, a big affair. Ted has no card. He's raw about it, and he's laid a wager with me that she's all bunk about her rules, that she doesn't really know what her guests do, that any fellow—the first man we met in the street—given a clean shirt could pass muster. I've taken the bet. I don't believe she'll receive anyone without credentials, she'll find a way to freeze the newcomer out, even if a fellow took him in, unless she knows he's all right. Ted's bet me a thousand dollars that he can pick up the first man he meets outside the club, give him the clothes and get him in —if I'll take him past the door and simply say: "This is Mr.—oh, any old name! Now, do you see?"

Mark nodded. "I see!" he said, and laughed. There was vigor in his laughter, a jubilant ring of freedom.

The sound startled Archie, he looked up sheepishly, but Teddy joined in the laugh.

"I met you first outside the club" he said, "that's the whole of it. It's a wager—" he made a boyish grimace— "I don't want to lose my thousand dollars, Archie, here, is a bit stiff-necked about it. You—I wonder—" and he leaned back, thrusting his hands into his pockets and jingling his money rather obviously—"I wonder if you'll help me out? It's only for one afternoon, you know, at a tea, there'll be dancing, no end of fun, but the test will be the dinner afterwards. She only asks the elect to that—the sons of Colonial dames, I call 'em. I bet she'll ask you."

"What do I get?" asked Mark.

Archie frowned; it was plain that the wager had been made in a rash moment; doubtless the clubhouse luncheon had not been entirely dry, and the exhilaration of the moment was disappearing. Archie began to see objections to his part in it, but his younger companion was eager to pay off his score; his eyes sparkled.

"I believe you'll go," he said gayly, "you look game! I'll tell you—if you carry it off well, if you get invited to that precious dinner afterwards, I'll give you half—five hundred dollars."

Mark shook his head. "That's conditional. Your friend here has given me to understand that I'll fail anyway; be frozen out by the lady. In that case, I'd get nothing—according to your conditions. I won't go a step unless I get the five hundred down and my clothes. I've none for the occasion, gentlemen," he added with a twisted- smile that the older one caught with some uneasiness.

Teddy laughed boisterously. "You're right, old thing; that's fair; I'll put up the stakes and I'll get you rigged out; now, what about it?"

Mark looked from one to the other thoughtfully. "One thing more, who's the lady?"

"I don't think you have any right to ask yet," broke in Archie.

"I don't go unless I know," Mark retorted tersely.

"Oh, come on—he's got to know!" Teddy said. "It's Mrs. Lynn, she was a Vandevere. Now, do you know?"

Mark shook his head. "I'm not up —in Burke's Peerage."

Teddy laughed boisterously. "She's Burleson's sister-in-law; she receives for him—Burleson's the millionaire.

Burleson? Mark Grant stared at at them. How small the world was! This man had been one of his dead uncle's close friends, he had even testified at the trial!

Archie looked at him curiously. "You know the name?"

Mark nodded; the idea caught him; to come face to face with his own old world again! But he answered laconically.

"I've heard it."

Teddy was getting anxious. [illegible] you know—is it a bargain?"

Of This and That

This column is now nearly four years old. Writing it is something like speaking over the radio, in that the audience is unseen and unknown. There is no heckling, but neither is there any applause! Of course, we are often obliged to deal with distasteful subjects such as diseases, insects, weeds, soil erosion, etc.

When this department, now known as Line Elevators Farm Service, was organized, we were told to make ourselves useful to farmers. This we have endeavoured to do and, judging from the demands made upon our services and publications, our efforts have not been in vain. In case this seems self-satisfied, we confess disappointment in the response to our weed identification service. Last year, about 600 specimens were sent in by Line Elevator agents for their farmer patrons. This is not enough. It would not be so disappointing if provincial departments of agricultu[illegible]tal farms were kept busy naming weeds, but they are not.

No farmer can plan weed control measures intelligently unless he knows the weeds. Many farmers have become involved in very heavy expense because an unidentified perennial such as leafy spurge, gained a solid foothold before it was recognized. These two statements merit attention. It is not much trouble to take specimens to a Line Elevator agent, and the identification is accurate because when in doubt we appeal to the Division of Botany, Ottawa. If you prefer to send directly to a government department, by all means do so. But send unknown weeds somewhere.

GOVERNMENT ROAD GRANT—

THE ALBERTA GOVERNMENT through the proper department operates a plan by which rural municipalities are given a grant to build roads. This grant is given on a dollar for dollar basis which means that for each dollar advanced by the government a like amount must be spent by the municipality. This does not interfere with the regular M.D. road work which is done pretty much on a divisional basis, but is something extra. There are some restrictions as to what roads the money shall be spent on, the idea being that main market roads should be built up so that as many people as possible benefit from the joint government-municipal road expense. It is also desired that the grant money be spent in as few places as possible, though in this respect there is some lee-way.

There is, however, a feature of the plan that is manifestly unfair to the municipalities, namely that any road grant sanctioned in the early part of the year must all be used up in that particular year. There is no provision for carrying the grant from year to year, so that when circumstances prevent the expenditure of all the grant money in any particular year it may be carried over into the next. It is even worse than this, by the simple fact of circumstances combining so that all the grant money could not be spent in any particular year, the grant in the following year is correspondingly reduced. This is what has happened to the M.D. of Beaver this season. Last year the government grant for road purposes was $10,000, but due to unavoidable circumstances, wet weather, machinery breakdowns, etc., only a portion of the $10,000 was spent. This year the government road grant for the M.D. of Beaver is cut to $6,000.00.

As far as roads are concerned this is a comparitively new country. There is neither the population or the wealth to build roads to the standard of roads in Eastern Canada and the United States, but some kind of roads have to be built and councillors find this one of their most important duties. The M.D. of Beaver Council had a rather ambitious road program in view for this season and have recently purchased new road building equipment. At the April meeting it decided to ask the government for a road grant of $25,000.00 and it must have been rather discouraging to have the 1944 government road grant not raised well above last year's figures, but placed much below them.

We believe that when once a government road grant is made to any particular municipality, it should be ear marked for that particular municipality's use and if it was deemed unwise or impossible to spend it all that year the balance should be carried over as a credit to the next. In this case the M.D. should put a like amount into a special fund. Anyway, because councillors preferred to spend road grant money wisely and not foolishly, is hardly a good reason for the road grant being reduced the following year.

VICTORY BONDS AND THE POST-WAR—

(Ottawa Journal)

A SILLY AND HARMFUL suggestion heard too often these days is that when the war is over the Government of Canada may not be able to meet its obligations, with a consequent doubtful future for Victory Bonds. Finance Minister Ilsley, in a speech at Windsor this week, dealt with such talk, and it is to be hoped that his words are read widely. Said he:

> "It will be of the greatest importance that we maintain, indeed assure, a ready and stable market for all these millions of bonds that we have sold. We have now developed the methods for accomplishing this, and we will therefore be able to deal with any situation which may develop in a way which will keep faith with the millions of small investors who are supporting the savings program in this emergency."

The notion that this rich country is going to pass into poverty or chaos with the war's end, unable to meet its obligations, is a fantastic travesty of obvious fact. We have the resources, the people, the plant and machinery, the managerial productive skills—why on earth should anybody imagine that we will be incapable of using them?

WOMENS' EXTENSION SERVICE DEMONSTRATIONS COMMENCE IN MAY

An expansion in the Womens' Extension Programme was announced recently by the Department of Agriculture, and it is expected that permanent District Home Economists will be stationed this year at Lethbridge, Calgary, Red Deer, Stettler and Westlock. These economists will be available to Womens' Clubs for lectures, demonstrations, consultation, and assistance with home problems at any time of the year.

In addition there will be District Home Economists stationed at Vermilion and Grande Prairie for the months of May to September inclusive. A sewing demonstrator has also been appointed whose itinerary will be planned from Edmonton for the Province.

Demonstrations will begin in May, and there are several topics under the main headings of Foods, Sewing, and Miscellaneous from which to choose. Details and application forms may be obtained from the Supervisor, Women's Extension Work, Alberta Department of Agriculture. Groups interested should send for these now, so that application day be made as early as possible.

MOISTURE SUPPLY

Some of those interested in crop production in Alberta have expressed concern about the lack of soil moisture at this season of the year. It is pointed out, however, by A. M. Wilson, Field Crops Commissioner, that while the soil is admittedly drier than it has been in the past two years, it is not advisable to become unduly pessimistic over crop prospects.

Think Of Mr. Amyot

(From the North Bay Nugget)

"Are you among the fortunate ones who have had a chat with the maimed Sergeant Rolly Amyot since he returned home from the wars?"

"Amyot left North Bay sturdy in body and in mind, a fine young athlete, personable and extremely well liked by everybody who had the good fortune to know him. He was well equipped to live a full and happy life. That was three years ago. Today he is back in North Bay and he has no right arm. He is lame and must use a cane. He has a hole as big as a hockey puck in his chest, another hole equally as large in his side and one of his knees is badly battered. Pieces of shrapnel are still lodged in various parts of his body. He has a gnawing pain which never leaves him for a second. And he faces two major operations within the next six [illegible]

A lot of us are going around with a chip on our shoulder these days, and if there is one person in the whole of this city who one might think should really be 'mad at the world' in general, it is Rolly Amyot. But he happens to be the least 'mad at the world' of any person we know. Rolly Amyot may be broken in body, but he very definitely is not broken in spirit. This writer had the privilege of chatting with Amyot the other day, and it was the most refreshing experience we have had in a long long time. We were astounded to find him fairly bubbling over with cheerfulness, good humor and hope. He never stopped laughing and joking. He never once showed the merest trace of despondency or vindictiveness. With almost unbelievable glee did he tell us of the 'fun' he was having in learning how to shave with his left hand, to write with his left hand, to dress with his left hand. (His only complaint was that he was going to 'miss' his right arm when embracing his Scottish bride!)"

If we think of Mr. Amyot when the Victory Loan salesman asks us how much we are going to buy in the Sixth Victory Loan campaign, we'll likely decide on a larger amount with cheerfulness.

Mrs. E. Johnson entertained the A.C.L.A. at her home Tuesday of last week. Mrs. C. Patterson was presented with a baby gift, a chenille crib spread. Glenda Bernice was also enrolled in the Cradle Roll Dept. Lenten "Penny a Meal boxes" totalled fifty dollars.

Elna Moen spent Thursday and Friday of last week in the city.

Mr. E. A. Moen attended a CCF board meeting at Holden last Friday night.

Lloyd Berg spent a week end in the city recently.

The A.C. Luther League held their "Youth for Christ" program at the Amisk Creek church Sunday afternoon. Gordon Hendrickson, Bardo, was guest speaker. Youth for Christ Offering was $25.00.

The topic of conversation has turned from 'Spring work' to 'Bees'. We hope Amisk Creekers will soon have their bees 'installed' and change the topic to a less 'warm and stinging' subject.

Hilmar Moen, R.M.C.S. has been transferred to Halifax, N.S. to complete his training course.

Miss Florence Forgan, Amisk Creek teacher, underwent an operation in an Edmonton hospital Monday a.m. As yet no sub teacher has been secured.

WORLD OF WHEAT

By H.G.L. Strange

SUMMERFALLOW EARLY

Yield per acre is as a rule in strict proportion to the moisture which is contained in the soil and which is available for plant growth. Our prairie lands are like an enormous sponge that holds the rainfall until growing plants require it. It is most important, therefore, that farmers should try to conserve in the soil every precious drop of rain that falls.

Good rains usually occur in May and early June. Summerfallowing, therefore, should be done early; if possible the very instant that sowing of the present crop is finished, all so that these early rains can be conserved in the soil and so be available for the crop to be sown in the spring of 1945. If the land can be summerfallowed during May then more rainfall will be preserved, and so a higher yield will eventually be harvested.

Whenever the land is disturbed by ploughing, discing or cultivating, some precious moisture is lost by evaporation, yet weeds must be killed for weeds too use up moisture. Cultivation of the land to kill weeds should then be done as shallow as possible and as seldom as possible so that the least amount of moisture will be lost by evaporation.

Farm Implement Production Up

Ottawa, May 8—Total tonnage of farm machinery production in 1945 will be approximately one half the tonnage manufactured during 1940 and 1941, according to H. H. Bloom, administrator of farm and construction machinery for the Wartime Prices and Trade Board There will be no restriction on production of spare parts for farm machinery

The tonnage devoted to the 1945 manufacturing program will be confined to types of machinery essential to Canada's production of foodstuffs.

In addition to machinery for domestic use, Mr. Bloom pointed out that Canadian manufacturers are being asked to produce equipment specifically for establishing war veterans on the land Canada will also contribute production of farm equipment for rehabilitation under the UNNRA program, the administrator stated.

Mr. Bloom pointed out that the increased output in 1945 does not indicate that demand for all types and varieties of agricultural equipment can be filled. Rationing will continue to be necessary and only the most urgent and essential needs can be met", he said.

Speedier War Movement with New C.P.R. Signal System

THE new, electric automatic-block signal system installed at a cost of more than $1,100,000 between Chapleau and Schreiber on the Canadian Pacific Railway's Algoma district in northern Ontario ensures speedier and more [illegible] movement of trains over the [illegible] 250 miles of single track. A typical yard installation pictured above is the east switch of the White River yard with Number Four (the Vancouver-Toronto) the train leaving the station on the main line.

In getting vital war loads of freight and passengers through on time the importance of this installation cannot be overestimated. The actual territory it serves is the White River subdivision, the 130 miles from Chapleau to White River, and the Heron Bay subdivision, the 120 miles from White River to Heron Bay. The wheels and rails automatically operate the signals in three colors — red (stop), yellow (stop at next signal) and green (proceed).

The new signal system represents the very latest development in this type of railway equipment, according to W. M. Neal, C.B.E., the vice-president, who made the announcement of the system's opening in March.

Health Insurance To "Care For All"

Ottawa. — National health insurance will provide the answer to the increasing demand for medical care by Canadian people who are unable to provide themselves with full and complete preventive and treatment services, Prime Minister Mackenzie said Wednesday.

In a speech at the opening of a three-day dominion-provincial health insurance conference, Mr. Mackenzie said the need for health insurance was indicated by the census of 1941 which showed 62 per cent of the wage-earners received less than $950 a year.

The federal government now was in a position to place before the conference a draft national plan. The main objects of the draft plan were:

1. The reduction of morbidity and mortality and the creation of positive health.
2. The provision of medical care for all.
3. The protection of families against the hazard of illness.
4. The eradication of tuberculosis and venereal diseases; the reduction of mental illness, heart disease, arterial disease, nephritis, diabetes cancer and diseases of middle life.
5. To attack the causes of sickness and death vigorously and effectively.
6. The protection of motherhood and childhood.
7. The extension of public health services throughout the country.
8. The expansion of hospitals, sanatoria, laboratories, health units and health centres.
9. The integration of public health and medical care.
10. The provision of the services of the general practitioner, the consultant, the specialist, the surgeon and the nurse, the hospital, the dentist and ancillary services to everyone.

Mr. Mackenzie said the proposed plan would cost an estimated $250,000,000 annually an amount less than the present annual cost of illness.

BOOK OF JEWISH THOUGHTS

Every one of the 18,000 Jewish men and women in the Canadian combat services will be receiving a free copy of the Book of Jewish Thoughts which has been edited by the Chief Rabbi, the Rev. Dr. Joseph H. Hertz, as part of the Jewish educational and religious welfare program.

Over 200,000 copies of this work have been printed, mostly for Jewish men and women in His Majesty's services. The present edition, the first to appear in Canada, has been rendered necessary by the growing number of Jews in the Canadian services and the restrictions on paper in Great Britain.

Edmonton One Of Greatest Centres In Air Transport, Thinks Bracken

Winnipeg—John Bracken, national Progressive Conservative leader, in an interview here Tuesday night said that "oil development in northwestern Canada is almost beyond one's capacity to appreciate," and said Edmonton is becoming one of the greatest air transportation centres in Canada.

Mr. Bracken expressed disappointment that Winnipeg was lagging behind in development of its possibilities as a future centre of air transportation.

"The city of Edmonton," he said, "is getting some place and Winnipeg isn't."

Speaking on post-war issues to members of the Winnipeg Bracken club, he said the road to progress called for more efficient control of the power or business and industry to exploit while at the same time give assurance to them of fair treatment. This, he said, would be better than threats of confiscation which drive toward socialism.

No person can tell what the post-war world would be, politically or economically, he said. "All we can do is to fix the objectives for which we stand and work out what we think are the best methods of getting them.

Although ample moisture at the time of grain seeding is very desirable it does not follow that good crops necessarily result. The spring of 1936 was ideal when planting, but the hot dry summer caused one of the lowest yielding crops recorded. A dry soil at planting time was experienced in 1942, but good growing conditions later in the year resulted in excellent yields.

THANK YOU CANADA
...but there's still a WAR JOB to do!

OFFICE OF THE MINISTER
CANADA
DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL WAR SERVICES

To my Fellow Canadians:-

You the citizens of Canada and members of the Voluntary Salvage Committees and many other Voluntary War Workers have done an excellent war job.

Canada in doing her part to help win the war, has been greatly assisted by your voluntary and unselfish devotion to the important duty of saving and turning in the essential war materials. You have backed up the boys overseas and your activities have been a material factor in turning the tide of battle against the enemy. When Canada's stock piles have been dangerously low you have discovered, saved, and salvaged waste material which has been turned into weapons, ammunition, explosives and containers. Your Salvage Campaigns have been Nation-Wide and of National importance. Your job has been a big one which you have nobly performed.

When at war the past is the past and we must look to the future. Again I appeal to you!

There is another National war emergency which must be met and overcome. Experts on the matter have assured me that there is a critical shortage of Waste Paper and that the situation is desperate. War supplies must reach our Fighting Forces who will use them against the enemy. War supplies must be safely packed. As we march on nearer to the enemy more supplies are required by our Fighting Men. More - much more Waste Paper is wanted now.

Paperboard mills are working on a day-to-day basis and some are facing shut-downs because reserve stock supplies of Waste Paper are critically low. From now on every scrap of waste paper is to be saved and turned in to the Nation through regular Waste Paper channels.

Fellow Canadians please help!

Yours sincerely,

L. R. LaFlèche,
Minister, National War Services.

CANADA NEEDS 20,000 TONS OF WASTE PAPER EVERY MONTH

WHAT IS WANTED: You can remedy this critical paper shortage by saving every scrap of Waste Paper, namely: wrapping paper—store bags—cardboard—cartons—corrugated board—old magazines and books—envelopes and letters—newspapers. These represent the raw material for making vitally needed Paper containers.

HOW TO DO IT: Tie securely in separate bundles. (The little time you take will save thousands of man hours.) Then dispose of it through your local voluntary Salvage Committee or other War Voluntary Organization, or sell it through any known trade channels, your pedlar or others. The important thing is to get your Waste Paper moving to the mills.

Mr. Ritchie of the Dept. of Municipal Affairs was present and thanked Council for meeting on Wednesday. It was a convenience to him as he had several councils to meet.

He announced that the government road grant would be $6000.00 this year, on a dollar for dollar basis, to be paid 100 per cent in Treasury orders. Much discussion took place before a final arrangement was made as to where the road grant money would be spent. Here are the locations:

Division three. From the north-west corner of section 24-49-19, north four miles. From Ryley north five miles.

Councillor Logan moved that the monthly statement of bank and cash balances be accepted. Carried.

Councillor Ovens reported that he and the secretary had met with a union of municipalities of areas around Edmonton and had discussed the hospital question as pertaining to maternity cases. The Union felt that the M.D.'s have no responsibility to the hospital as regards maternity cases, when the government pays all charges.

On the motion of Councillor Swabey, Councillor Oven's report of the M.D. Union was accepted.

Moved by Councillor Ovens that we join the M.D. Union. Carried.

Letters from the Salvation Army, Beulah Home and the Canadian Institute for the Blind thanking Council for grants were read.

A number of land sales were dealt with. Lots 20 to 24, hamlet of Poe, were sold to Roman Kondroski at $10 each. The N.E. of 10-50-20-W4 was witheld from sale. There were three offers for this quarter. Councillor Giebelhaus was given authority to handle the sale of N.E. 24-49-14-W4.

The South half of 27-49-14 was sold to A. Kelm. And the North-east 27-49-14 was sold to A. Doria. E. S. Hill purchased S. E. 26-49-14.

Councillor Swabey said that his division needed the services of a fire warden. That in addition to brush fires there were ground fires to contend with. On the motion of Councillor Logan, Councillor Swabey was authorized to appoint a fire guardian for necessary territory in divisions 4 and 5.

The wages and mileage for the assessor was set at $5.00 per day and 10c per mile.

It was announced that Mrs. O'Brien was leaving in July and it was decided to advertise in the local paper for an office assistant.

One application for exemption from taxes under the soldiers relief act was granted.

Report of Reeve re visit with Government Officials of the Department of Agriculture re weed infested lands was tabled.

Offer re reduction of payments to Phillips estate was tabled.

The councillors read their own accounts and they were passed as read.

Council decided to refuse payment to Hospitals for Maternity cases since Provincial Government had made provision for these cases to be provided for by the Department of Health.

The office staff holidays are to be arranged between the staff members at times suitable to them.

CHAPTER II

SYNOPSIS

Released from prison after serving fifteen years for a murder he didn't commit, Mark Grant goes to the office of a lawyer named Fosdick, where he asks for a legacy left to him while he was in prison. Desperate when Fosdick tells him he will have to wait until tomorrow, Mark is tempted to accept when two well-dressed young men offer him five hundred dollars to go with them to a party. One of the young men, Teddy has bet the other, Archie that he can take any man he meets to an exclusive party being given by a woman famous for her careful selection of guests.

Mark considered it, a faintly malicious twinkle in his eyes. There was an element of risk in it that appealed to him. He was to see one of his uncle's old friends, by this odd chance, but the man—old, fifteen years ago would have forgotten him. Men forget the boys they help send to jail! As for these two, Ted, he thought, was little more than a boy, an idle young fellow spoiled by wealth he imagined, but at heart, good tempered and fair. The older and taller of the two he did not make out so easily.

"It's a bargain if I've nothing else to do—nothing but to try to pass a famous hostess and spend an hour at a social function."

"That's all, absolutely all, on my honor unless you hit the bull's-eye and get a belly dinner," said Ted, "and it's five hundred and your clothes."

"Done!" said Mark recklessly.

But Archie swung around in his chair and struck the table suddenly with the flat of his hand.

"It's done—if you keep to your part. Mind, I've got to take you in, you can't break in, and you may be honest, you may be a—a—"

"A hold-up man," suggested Mark cooly, meeting his eyes with a bold look, "or a murderer. What then?"

"This," said Archie, "if I catch you at any hold up tricks, at anything ungentlemanly, I'll call the police."

"Oh come," said Teddy deprecatingly.

"Shut up!" snapped Archie, "this is my end of it. I mean what I say, Mr.—" he looked hard at Mark.

His attitude was so natural, it was so much to his credit to feel uneasy at the shabby trick they had planned, that Mark Grant almost liked him for it.

"Suppose you tell me your names first," he said cooly.

"My name's Theodore Banks," said the younger one, reddening a little, "they call me 'Ted'; this is my best friend and relative Archibald Landon," he chuckled irresistibly, "one of the old Landons. That's why he's so pat with the lady; he's sure to get to the dinner; he had a grandfather! I'm on the democratic side of the house. I'm Teddy Banks, and she doesn't like it. Sounds common, don't you see, like mud-ark—eh? Now, what's yours?"

Mark hesitated for the twentieth part of a second, but his case was ancient history; these two young fellows would not go back fifteen years; still there might be others—yet he scorned a falsehood. "Mark Grant," he said.

As he had supposed, it conveyed nothing.

"We'll change it for tonight," Banks said, frowning and trying to think of a name. "She doesn't care how tough a fellow is if he's got some old name. Dutch, Hugenot, Colonial, some old thing."

But Langdon broke in again. "Mr. Grant hasn't answered me. I'll throw up the sponge if he doesn't agree. What do you say, sir?" he added sharply, turning to him.

Mark threw back his head and looked at him, there was a mocking little devil in his eyes, he saw that the young man, for all his blustering, did not see that he would be at a stranger's mercy. If the wager was betrayed he would be socially damned."

"I agree to go to the function and behave like a gentleman," he replied, and again laughed; the situation seemed to him full of amusing possibilities, an ex-convict at a select affair, the first day out!

But Teddy Banks jumped to his feet. "That's a go!" he cried; "Come on, we'll go and get the clothes."

The preliminaries of getting clothed, coached by Teddy Banks, and hurried from pillar to post, took up the brief interval before the entertainment. It was late in the afternoon, in fact, when Mark found himself in charge of Archie Langdon, on his way to earn the money in his pocket. He had no time to even consider the miraculous change from twenty cents to five hundred dollars, but he was aware that—clad like a man of the world—he had more than passed muster with Teddy Banks. When that young man saw him in the prescribed raiment he had given vent to hilarious delight.

"By George, you'll do it—Mrs. Lynn will think you're a prince in disguise!" Then he sobered for a moment. "I say, who are you, anyway? You belong to—what's the saying, —the clothes-wearing race!"

"It's quite a while since my ancestors left off feathers and a blanket," Mark had replied dryly.

He could still hear Teddy's appreciative chuckle. Now he saw that Landon was observing him, too, with apparently conflicting feelings. Mark fancied that he was relieved that his charge looked well and yet Archie was not at ease. It might be that he was afraid that this presentable stranger might go too far toward winning the wager for young Banks. He was taciturn enough, but he had to explain some things that Banks [illegible] overlooked.

"Of course I can take you in—that's easy," he said tersely, "but Mrs. Lynn won't like it. She likes to be asked ahead and to know who the man is; it's one of her rules. But that's not the point. After the reception she asks a few, a select few, to stay to dinner. Ted's wager is that she'll ask any man in a clean shirt; he swears she will; I know she won't. She'll probably freeze you at the start. Ted will lose, but you're paid. The point is this: I'll be left out, too, because I'm bringing you in uninvited; that's in the wager, too."

"Hard on you," said Mark, "as far as I can see it's up to me to make such a good impression she'll ask us both to dinner."

"I hope you don't, that's all!" Landon retorted acidly. "I don't mind losing the wager, but — confound it, I don't—well, I hate to do the thing!"

Mark stopped him. "Suppose we call it off; I'll give back the cash."

Landon shook his head gloomily. "Can't! It's made with Banks. I'm in for it, but—" he turned a hard, cold look on his companion—"if you trespass on this, I'll—" he stopped, something in Mark's look stayed him. "I say," he added hurriedly, "you may be all right; you look like a gentleman, I admit it, but I hate the whole darned business."

"Being a gentleman, I know you do," Mark retorted grimly. "I'd as lief give it up as not, myself."

"Too late, we're at the door!" Landon waved his walking-stick toward the long striped caterpillar awning stretched across the pavement from a fine house on the corner.

Mark looked it over curiously; it looked like a monument of dollars. "So, that's it?"

Landon nodded. "That's Burleson's. Mrs. Lynn receives for him; he's her brother-in-law, a widower, no children, he's the guardian of his wife's niece, that's all."

Mark said nothing but he was aware that Landon gave him another uneasy look, then they entered the awning and fell into line with the guests who were already ascending the carpeted steps; a few were coming out; many were going in. Archie was greeted here and there as they went up to the wide open door. He seemed to have many friends; some stopped for a word, but Mark noticed that he was not presented and smiled a little to himself. But his thoughts were busy; he knew Burleson, had known him well as a boy. Would the great man remember the seventeen-year-old lad he had helped send to prison? Mark thought not, but if he did—Teddy Banks would lose his wager!

They were in the house now, it was softly lit; the wide hall and stairs showed growing plants, the atmosphere was sweet scented, hot; there was a buzz of conversation, the alluring sound of distant music, beautifully gowned women, distinguished looking men, a notable assembly, Mark saw at a glance, and an ex-convict for a guest! Landon, turning on him at that moment, saw his cheek bones whiten, but he did not know the cause. It was not Burleson; Mark had suddenly perceived the girl who stood beside the stately, white-haired hostess. There are moments when the rush of an emotion makes a man change color; Mark Grant—knowing how he came there and why—went white when he first saw Pamela Rodney. The next moment Landon was reluctantly presenting him to Mrs. Lynn. Mark noticed that he omitted the words, "my friend," he said only: Stewart Byram," the name Teddy Banks had given him.

He was aware of a handsome, worldly looking woman; her fine eyes seemed to appraise him keenly, but her manner was charming. She held out a gracious hand.

"One of the Utica Byrams, I presume?" she said.

Mark bowed; he was only conscious of the presence next to her, and that he hated the whole business!

"I know one of your aunts, I think," said the suave voice, and Mark cursed Teddy Banks for playing some trick on them. Then he heard Mrs. Lynn again. "Pam, dear, let me present a friend of Archie's, Stewart Byram. Mr. Byram, my niece, Miss Rodney."

Again Mark bowed.

Pam had just passed Archie Landon on to a young girl in pink, and she turned with a radiant smile for the newcomer. Mark scarcely heard the words of her little conventional greeting; he was listening to her voice; it seemed as lovely as her face. He had been too long in prison to turn his tongue easily to social inanities, but he found something to say to her.

"I've been out of the gay world so long I feel dumb," he told her, "but Balaam's Ass spoke when the angel stood in the way."

His bluntness caught her; she laughed delightedly.

"I wonder where you've been?" she said; then she caught the fire that played in his eyes and flushed prettily. "You look romantic; as if you'd journeyed far—in strange lands and done—" she laughed again softly—"strange deeds!"

"You're right" said Mark. "I've been to Nomansland and lived in a castle there."

Pam laughed back at him, her eyes shining. She was small and slender with an ivory head and bright brown hair. Mark thought he could lift her with one hand, but she had a face like a flower—some flower of his dreams.

"Did you slay the dragon?" she asked drolly.

"No," he replied sturdily, "I've come out to slay him now—or perish."

"Where will you find him? Here?" She swept the crowded room with laughing eyes. "In the ballroom? In the conservatory?"

Mark followed her eyes and saw the distant ballroom; they were dancing there; beyond he glimpsed the screened aisles of a conservatory. He looked back into her lovely flushed young face. He could not keep her here, guests were already crowding in; she would be swept away from him.

"I haven't danced in fifteen years," he said in a low voice; "few do in Nomansland. But—will you sit out one dance with me—just one?"

"Not danced in fifteen years?" she breathed her quick surprise; it seemed immensely long to her. "Why, I was only six years old." Then she blushed furiously; "you've made me tell my age! Yes I can give you this dance; I kept it for Teddy Banks, and Archie Landon's just told me he can't come—" She stopped short, glancing aside at her aunt.

Mrs. Lynn, in the midst of new arrivals, had turned to a tall, grayheaded man who had just taken his place beside her. Mark stared at him. He knew that profile, but he scarcely knew the face. Could this old, stooping, broken man be Burleson? Fifteen years had wrought fearful havoc; he looked forty years older. Could it be the man? The man who had testified against the boy of seventeen?

CANNING SUGAR IS STILL TEN POUNDS

Edmonton, May 15—Ten pounds of sugar per person for canning is the allotment throughout Canada, but consumers who wish to use D coupons to buy the alternative half pound of sugar instead of ready made preserves can get an additional 13 pounds of sugar, C. G. McKee, regional superintendent of rationing points out.

There are 26 D coupons valid during 1944, each good for the alternative purchase of sugar. If a consumer uses all D coupons for buying sugar together with the 10 pounds of canning sugar allowed in the season he acquires a total of 23 pounds of sugar the superintendent stated.

Likewise, consumers can purchase ready made preserves instead if using canning sugar to make them, by exchanging F canning sugar coupons for D coupons at a Local Ration Board. This exchange can not be made before F coupons become valid, the first five are valid on May 25 and the second five on July 6.

MONEY—

AT THE PRESENT time there is going on in various capitals of the world, within and without legislative halls, discussions regarding post war finance. These discussions centre around huge stabilization funds set up by international agreement which involve problems of tremendous importance to the world at large, each individual nation, and to some extent at least, each individual. What will ultimately emerge from the discussions both private and official, it is impossible to say at the present time but it is safe to say some effort will be made and some international agreements arranged to prevent a reoccurence, if possible, of the present war. It is the belief of many men that currency troubles were at the root of the world wide economic depression of the thirties and that the depression in no small degree was responsible for the present war. We are of the opinion that while perhaps the above beliefs do not tell the whole story, there is some truth in them and at least it is encouraging to read that effort is being made to so adjust economic conditions throughout the world so its population might be spared another orgy of strife and bloodshed.

The apparent truth is that currency problems both international and domestic have, through a combination of circumstances reached a stage where it is difficult even for experts to devise methods that will adequately serve the need, protect their own interests, and at the same time maintain peace and prosperity throughout the world. It is unlikely that in our time there will be a return to the gold standard as we knew it prior to 1914, but as one noted British economist expressed it a few years ago, "if the world's business cannot go through the bottleneck of the gold standard, what?" Already exponents of metallic currency are advocating various ideas embracing both gold and silver and just what part these metals will play in world finance in the future is hard to say. Here in Canada and the United States it is illegal to possess gold. In 1934 the price of gold jumped from $20.00 to $35.00 per ounce and right now the Bombay, India, market is paying the equivalent of $60.00 an ounce for gold and the same applies to the Cairo market, while some South American countries are paying the equivalent of $40-$50.

Any commercial system, international or domestic which is tied hand and foot to a metallic currency, is working under a disadvantage. It was, so it is claimed, "the inhumanities of the gold standard which brought about the depression," and the problem financial experts are pondering now is how far they can leave the metallic anchorage without getting caught in the whirlpool of paper.

Ottawa News Letter

HEALTH BILL WOULD AID RURAL PARTS

Ottawa,—Vastly improved medical, hospital and nursing services for farm areas, villages and towns is one of the prime objects of the Dominion Government's Health Insurance Bill, Hon. Ian Mackenzie, Minister of Pensions and National Health, told the Dominion-Provincial Health Conference here. Due to lack of doctors nurses, hospitals and public health services in rural districts, sickness and death rates are much higher in the country than in urban centres, Mr. Mackenzie stated. Less than six per cent of rural communities have full time medical officers, surveys show.

"Our people can enjoy full and vigorous health only if adequate facilities for preventive and curative medical care of the highest standard are readily available to all, irrespective of geographic location and financial status," Mr. Mackenzie advised provincial ministers and deputy ministers gathered to consider the bill.

The Dominion Health Minister made it plain that one main purpose of the plan is to expand hospital, medical and dental services in rural areas. He suggested to the provinces that doctors and other professional people engaged under the scheme to serve the public be paid on a salary basis in rural sections to ensure as good service for people on farms and in villages and towns, as for those living in cities.

SCHEME TO COST $250,000,000 YEARLY

Of the $250,000,000 annual cost of complete medical service to all, it is expected that $150,000,000 will be met by contributions of insured persons and that the Dominion will pay the balance of $100,000,000. Provinces would thus have to pay only cost of administration and for service to those unable to pay the stipulated nominal charges.

In this regard the impression is strong here that cost of the scheme to individuals will be reduced below the amounts originally proposed. Financial details will be settled at a general Dominion-Provincial Conference later. Individual provinces, having authority under the B.N.A. act over health, can join in the scheme or not, as they wish. But most have indicated their intention to participate.

FARM CREDIT PLAN WINS APPROVAL

Hon. J. L. Ralston, Acting Prime Minister while Rt. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King is overseas, assured the Commons that the bill providing for loans for farm improvement will soon be presented to Parliament. Meantime consideration of the new Bank Act proceeds in committee. Hon. J. L. Ilsley pointed out that provision for a floor under farm prices and other measures to assure agricultural prosperity, will greatly help farmers' credit in the future. But he indicated also that the government may soon go ahead with the Central Mortgage Bank Act, which will make long term loans more easily available to farmers at reasonable rates.

The new Bank Act provisions for medium term loans to farmers for purchase of machinery, electrical systems and for improvements such as fencing and drainage, have won general approval.

The government plan to guarantee part of such loans, extend the time payment and reduce interest, together with the proposed Mortgage Bank establishment, is regarded here as opening a new era for farm financing, both through the chartered banks and otherwise. It is also predicted that, by longer term bank borrowing and paying cash for implements and machinery, prices of these will be substantially reduced.

Cost of credit for balance of the purchase price will be much less and credit losses will not have to be included in the original price, as now.

20,000 TONS OF WASTE PAPER ARE NEEDED EVERY MONTH FOR MAKING ESSENTIAL WAR MATERIAL

The need is desperate! To help Canada meet the critical shortage, not a scrap of wanted paper should be burned or thrown away!

WHAT IS WANTED

You can remedy this critical paper shortage by saving every scrap of Waste Paper, namely: wrapping paper—store bags — cardboard — cartons—corrugated board—old magazines and books—envelopes and letters—newspapers. These represent the raw material for making vitally needed Paper containers.

HOW TO DO IT

Tie securely in separate bundles. (The little time you take will save thousands of man hours.) Then dispose of it through your local voluntary Salvage Committee or other War Voluntary Organization, or sell it through any known trade channels, your pedlar, dealers or others. The important thing is to get your Waste Paper moving to the mills.

Do Your Part! Salvage every Scrap of Paper you can!

THE STORY OF INFLATION . . . IN ONE EASY LESSON

In wartime, more people are working

but half of what is made is for war

so consumers can't get all they want

so prices go up . . .

costs of production go up and producers and dealers need higher prices and the vicious spiral of inflation gets started the spiral grows — and the sky is the limit

MAKE YOUR DOLLARS FIGHT!

It has taken us four years to build up our war production to the point where we can trade the enemy blow for blow. During that precious time, many of Canada's sons gave their lives.

For four long years we worked and bided our time, knowing that when we had gathered our strength their debt would be paid and repaid.

Their sacrifice must not be in vain.

Your purchases of War Savings Certificates and Stamps will do it. Make your dollars fight and "Speed the Victory!"

Local Boy Writes Of Italy

The following is a portion of a letter received by Mrs. D. E. George from her husband Douglas, in Italy. The letter was mailed on April 27 and reached here May 8, a matter of only ten days.

He writes: "Well, here it is very nearly the end of another month, and still the same old shell fire and dark smoky nights to contend with. I don't mind the days, but the nights are so long one wonders just what is going to happen next. Everyone is asleep except me, as I have a 5 hour shift every morning from the [illegible], therefore my sleeping period commences this p.m. I get only a mere 2 or 3 hours sleep, and believe me, it's no good. The bombing and shell fire at the present is drastic and shakes the places for miles around.

The mail is very difficult to get in here, as everything is brought in by mule train.

I still have 3 lots of cigs which is a good thing, and smoke close to 50 cigs a day. Getting so little sleep, it almost seems as if each day is a double day, and naturally goes doubly hard on my smokes.

We have to heat our tea with canned heat and are getting used to the difficulties we found on our arrival. No lights, no fire, whispering all the time, sneaking and lurching, as some wandering Jerry Patrol might open up. It's quite an experience alright, but I've had enough of it now and will take the real thing any day.

I read our latest edition of the Maple Leaf (a paper for Canadians in Italy) and saw where France certainly caught it the other day and night by our Air Power. They say explosions could be heard 40 miles inland, right across the Straits of Dover, on our side. I don't think it will take long now, and isn't it miraculous how our Airforce and superiority have practically driven the Luftwaffe from the skies, how the Navy has battled the raging enemy waters to almost free the dangers of [illegible] shipping losses, etc., and last but not least by all means, our powerful Allied armies, as well as the Red war machine, rapidly striving to batter and annihilate the Hun Armies as quickly as possible, so Nazism will forever and always be something overwhelmed for good. Maybe lots of people say, "It can't be done,"—well, don't ever think it won't! We are playing for keeps and time is the only factor of the present situation, right?

Sometimes I wish I had the knowledge of an author and I believe I'd write a book on "Hitler the German," and "Nazism" that would make more than their faces turn red. They'll have something to remember us by for many long years to come, so why worry?

It's 12:30 p.m. and breakfast time and I can see tea is hard tack, bully beef, a couple of sausages and only enough tea for a fly! Around this time all the boys are talking of the night before and how close they came to getting "it", and although it is nerve-wracking, one gets used to it.

I'll be glad when Cassino is taken as then Jerry will be plenty [illegible].

Every type of soldier is fighting side by side, from the Indians [illegible] Kasas, which are very much like Canadians. The weather is simply grand, but am feeling the ill effects of having to lie day and [illegible] in a "hole" as we are at the present, with no exercise and [illegible] sunshine".

I dreamt of home last night and Dad was showing me around. [illegible] mules we use for hauling [illegible] the windows out of the Bank. I only wish the dream would have been true, but [illegible] and we hope it won't be too long now!

KETCHAMOOT

A large crowd turned out for Mothers' Day services. Besides the regular program given out for that day, Ella Brown gave an interesting reading on the life of Madame Chiang-Kai-Shek, Keith Appleby, a violin solo accompanied by Mrs. Stinson, a solo by Mrs. Brown and readings by Mavis Mitchell, Noreen Lee and Nola McGinitie.

Mrs. McLennan returned to her home at Ryley Tuesday, after spending a few days with her daughters, Mrs. Charley Sears and Gladys McLennan, who accompanied her home along with her grandchildren, Gail and Gary.

Ross Fleming and Albert Sears had a happy reunion somewhere in England recently. Each not knowing where the other was, accidently met on their day off from duties and spent the day together.

Visitors at the W. A. Mitchell home Sunday were Mr. S. Stirritt and family, Mr. and Mrs. Williams and grand-daughter Muriel, Mr. A. F. Schultz and Angus Mitchell.

Mrs. Iven Mitchell was a passenger to Edmonton Friday.

In spite of the almost impassable roads following the snow storm of last week, a fairly large crowd turned out to pleasantly surprise Mr. John McGinitie on his 71st birthday anniversary at the Henry McGinitie home on Wednesday evening. Mr. McGinitie was lucky to receive two birthday cakes, one from Mrs. J. Brown and one from Mrs. Roloff. Some thing, these days, and the guests appreciated them too. A purse of money was also received. After lunch was over the guests departed for their homes, wishing him many more happy birthdays.

Mrs. J. Nicherson and daughter, Joanne is visiting at the home of the former's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Ingram.

Mrs. M. Brown and son Archie, Mr. and Mrs. Tennant and children of Bawlf were guests of Mrs. McMullen and the Coombes family Sunday.

Stanley Sears shipped a car load of fattened steers from the Bardo siding Thursday of last week.

Mr. G. W. Sears attended his club meeting in Edmonton Friday night and on Saturday attended the funeral of one of the veterans.

PLOWLESS FARMING

(Experimental Farms News)

Plowless farming is not a new idea as there are many farms in Western Canada on which a furrow has not been turned in years, says G. E. DeLong, Dominion Experimental Station, Lacombe, Alberta.

This does not mean that the plow is becoming obsolete. There are conditions of soil and climate where the plow will prepare a seed bed cheaper and more efficiently than any shallow tillage implement. Furthermore it has been demonstrated that on certain soil types plowed land which is not worked down and left in the rough is more resistant to soil drifting than that receiving any other cultural treatment. On the other hand, plowless farming under certain soil and climatic conditions may be possible and advisable where exclusive grain growing is practiced.

Records compiled at the Dominion Experimental Station, Lacombe, show that shallow tillage will reduce the cost of summerfallowing by one-half and at the same time more efficiently control most of the annual and perennial weeds. Shallow tillage or Plowless farming has also shown its value in the case of crops grown on stubble land. Experience has shown that, where it is possible to work stubble land with shallow tillage implements in such a way that two to three crops of weeds are germinated and destroyed before the crop is seeded, cleaner and better crops are produced than if the plow is used in preparing the seed bed.

Circumstances may occur in Central Alberta which make it impossible to follow shallow tillage and delayed seeding of an early maturing variety. A late spring may make it impossible to shallow till the land before seeding. Under such conditions, the plow has proved to be the best implement to use in preparing stubble land for a grain crop.

There are arguments both for and against plowless farming. Many farmers have tried plowless farming and are going back to the plow. Shallow tillage and plowless farming have proved best in the drier areas of the prairies, and their use is gradually increasing in areas favoured with more liberal rainfall. It is doubtful, however, if the plow will ever be discarded in areas having sufficient rainfall to produce forage crops and where sod has to be broken. The plow is still an essential implement in a diversified farming program.

HOSPITAL MEETING

About fifty people attended a meeting at the Variety Theatre on Wednesday night to hear Mr. Maxwell of Edmonton explain the Municipal hospital scheme.

Mr. Maxwell went into the matter in detail and those present were much interested in his address. Unfortunately the Mercury was not represented at the early part of the meeting and we cannot give an accurate outline of Mr. Maxwell's remarks. However in immediate future issues we will try and present the Municipal Hospital Scheme to the public so that those concerned will understand it reasonably well.

A committee composed of Messrs. A. Harrison, G. McFadzean, J. Brown, J. Rempel and S. Sears were appointed to further investigate the question and call another meeting.

Further details of the present proposal, description of area chosen, probable cost, estimated revenue and estimated expense will be published next week.

When Duty Calls

The road leading from Kingman to Tofield on Wednesday, May 10th, was anything but good. But with a council meeting scheduled at Ryley on that day Reeve Anderson started out willingly enough. A short distance out and road condition due to the wet snow became impassible for the light truck, so with a light heart but heavy step, J. A. commenced to walk and it was eight miles of tough walking before Tofield was reached. From here Councillor Swabey drove him to Ryley.

HOW BBC SHORTWAVES GET HERE

The illustration symbolizes graphically the mysterious "ionosphere", or Heaviside layer, at two different heights, and the course taken by shortwaves on their way from Britain to Canada. Irregularities in the ionosphere are among the chief causes of poor overseas reception. New CBC shortwave receiving stations at Dartmouth, N.S. and Hornby, Ont. are expected to improve overseas reception considerably.

MINISTIK GIRL MAKES GOOD

Of interest to Tofield in general and Ministik in particular, is the news that Dorothy Williams Dick is believed to be the only woman Airframe engineer in Canada.

She is the daughter of Mrs. H. E. Williams and the late H. E. Williams, for years employed by the Dominion Government and in latter years by the Fisheries Branch of Alberta. A brother, Francis, is District Manager of Ducks Unlimited Project (Ministik Bird Reserve) and a younger brother Keith, is a member of the R.C.A.F.

Dorothy, desiring to be of real assistance in the furthering of the war effort decided to go into Edmonton in October 1941 and enroll at the Technical School. Here she took a course in woodwork under the combined tutelage of Mr. Robinson of Tech and Mr. Steple of the Aircraft Repair, then topped this off with an additional ten weeks advanced course after beginning work at No. 2 Air Observer School. Her graduation marks were A-plus.

Dorothy was one of the original six girls hired by the Observer School and at present is the only one of them left. She was hired as an Engineer's Apprentice and by dint of hard work and unrelenting study she was in a position to write her "A" Ticket in less than two years. On Sept. 24, 1943, upon the recommendation by Mr. Peter Derbyshire (Supt. of Maintenance) she sat before Mr. J. Dorrie, Civil Aircraft Division Inspector and successfully passed her Airframe examination.

Her co-workers, to whom she is known as "Scarlett" says of her that "she is an industrious and efficient worker and deserves her ticket." She has set a high mark to shoot at—First Woman Airframe Engineer.

On December 16, 1943, Dorothy was married to Mr. Archie Dick, of High River, also a member of the staff at No. 2 A.O.S. and has since combined career and housekeeping.

Recently Betty Stewart of CFRN, interviewed Dorothy as one of the exceptional women of today, and those listening to "As A Woman Sees It" in the fore part of March heard a comprehensive explanation of the work in which she is engaged and the work entailed leading up to her well deserved position. The recording of this will make an interesting and cherished memento in years to come.

We are sure that all friends join in hearty congratulations and will be interested in the welfare and future of this girl from Ministik.

LINDBROOK

Miss Alice Bailey has returned home after spending two weeks in the city.

On Sunday, May 21, Mr. and Mrs. Goebault celebrated their silver wedding anniversary. They were married in Tofield twenty-five years ago. We wish them many more happy and prosperous years.

Last week one of Mr. Bailey's 3-year-old colts was killed on the track east of Lindbrook station.

The Newfield family have moved to the Krobko farm. They came from Blue Ridge, Alberta.

This past week's rain has put a sunny smile on the face of the farmer.

The Junior room now has a school population of 44.

Wilfrid LaRocque goes to Calgary for his Army medical June 1st.

The school pump has been broken for a week. It is a true saying "you never miss the water until the well goes dry."

McKENZIE

An evening of fine entertainment was sponsored by the students of the Lakeshore and McKenzie schools last Friday night. The event was their annual Festival concert.

Mr. and Mrs. Verlyn Moen and Marilyn motored to Hardisty on Saturday, May 13th to visit Mrs. Moen' mother. They returned Sunday evening.

Word was received recently that Pte. Peter Korby had been slightly wounded in active service. However, we are now pleased to report that the injury was not very serious and that Pete will soon be able to resume his duty again.

Jean Englesham returned home recently to spend the summer. She was employed at the General Hospital in Edmonton during the winter months.

Congratulations are extended to Mr. and Mrs. Art Trout on the birth of a son.

U.F.W.A. NOTES

In spite of doubtful roads, quite a number of members gathered at the home of Mrs Charlie Kallal for the May meeting of the U F W A. This meeting was postponed until Friday instead of the usual Thursday. Roll call was responded to by naming an allied country.

The blue and white quilt blocks were turned in to be handed to the local Red Cross and members arranged to turn in another quota for the next meeting.

The question of attending the summer conference in June at Edmonton was discussed but owing to there being no bus travelling on that date, and to the difficulty of obtaining motor cars for the trip, nothing definite was decided on beyond scouting for ways and means.

A paper on "Australia and her War Effort" was given by Mrs. C. Baptist.

The next meeting is to be held at the home of Mrs Burchard, when an article on "New Zealand" will be presented by Mrs. J. Appleby. This will be on the usual date, the 2nd Thursday, June 8.

BOY SCOUTS DO GOOD JOB

On May 24th, Empire Day, the Union Jack was flown from the newly erected flagstaff near the Tofield Cenotaph. The flagstaff was erected by the local boy scouts under the leadership of Blake Clutterham.

During the winter and early spring the Boy Scouts did considerable work in clearing the brush from lots adjacent to the Cenotaph and now with the improved appearance of the surroundings and the new flagstaff the "Cenotaph Corner" is an attractive site.

Word is to hand of the coming marriage of Mrs. G. Roberge to Mr. A. E. Hatton of Edmonton. Mr. Hatton has recently returned from overseas. The wedding is scheduled for June 2nd at Edmonton.

CHAPTER III

Released from prison after serving fifteen years for a murder he didn't commit, Mark Grant goes to the office of a lawyer named Fendick to collect a legacy left to him while he was in prison. When Fendick tells him he will have to wait, Mark accepts an invitation to a party to help a young man named Teddy Banks win a $1,000 bet with his friend Archie Landon. Mark is to get half $500, and new clothes. Archie introduces him to his hostess, Mrs. Lynn, as "Stewart Byram." As Mark is about to dance with Mrs. Lynn's niece, Pamela Rodney, he sees Burleson—the man who sent him to prison—going toward Mrs. Lynn.

"There's Uncle Herbert," said Pam. "It's lucky, if he hadn't come Aunt Henrietta would keep me here! You haven't seen the conservatory. Come let's go and look at the banana tree!"

"Is Mr. Burleson your uncle, then?" Mark asked, as they threaded their way through the gay throng, stopped here and there by first one guest and then another, all eager to greet the girl.

"No, his wife who died three years ago was my aunt, he's my guardian, that's all," Pam explained, "but he's good to me—oh, wonderfully! He's always good, you'll like him."

"Shall I?" Mark pondered, smiling down at the dark head below him. Then he caught Landon's eye across the dancers in the ballroom and read wrath in it. In a flash he understood. Landon was jealous.

They were in the conservatory now, alone in the sweet scented aisles, and something in his look, in the tense hardness of his face—seen in this light—gave her a delicious thrill of fright. She was young, and the touch of mystery about him intrigued her fancy. He was so different!

"We've only just met, you know!" she said, as lightly as she could, but her lip trembled; she was caught too in the tide of an emotion that swept them together like two chips in a torrent.

"I've known you all your life," Mark answered with a deep note in his voice.

The aisles of the conservatory were tropical; tall ferns and palms waved their fronds above them; lights shone like stars in the high arches overhead, a fountain played amid the full blown blossoms of the lotus, its heavy scent filling the air with the opium of madness. Music came to them softly, seductively, and Mark's hands closed on hers and held them.

Her warm, soft hands trembled in his, he knew why her dark lashes swept her flushed young cheeks; the tide had caught them both. Madness leaped up in him; in a moment he would have kissed her, he would have dared even that, for he knew she was in a dream, carried away; then, suddenly his sanity cried out within him:

"Thief—thief! You can't steal her love—you're a convict, let her go—you fool, you fool!"

He heard the voice and he let her hands drop. But he was swaying on his feet, sheer madness had him. After fifteen years of misery he loved—loved at first sight!

"I'm mad," he said, "stark mad"—then he bent humbly and crushed her fingers against his lips—"forgive me!"

She was not angry, he felt that as he looked up at her. Her eyes were clear and bright, her face had softened, her lips curved, she looked up at him a moment, silent, and then softly:

"You've been unhappy—there's a mystery about your life. I can see it!" Suddenly she laid her soft fingers lightly, a touch like thistledown, on his short crisp hair. "Some time you'll tell me, won't you?"

Mark mastered himself. He dared not take her hand again then. "Yes," he said bluntly. "I'll tell you some time and then, perhaps you'll hate me for coming here today!"

She did not in the least understand, he had swept her off her feet; there was something about him that fired her imagination, his evidently huge strength, his heathenish disregard of the conventions, the hint of unhappiness and proud endurance in his face, all these things captured her fancy. That half hour in the conservatory, twilight and fragrant as its aisles, was kind of a dream. She was still in a dream when someone came to take her off for a dance. In a dream she saw Mark, standing there in the ballroom door, watching her. His eyes followed her wherever she went, and there was that flame of life in them. The girl, young and romantic, was carried away with it; she had never seen quite such a man. Among the ballroom dancers he towered like a giant.

"I wonder who he is," she thought, and could not take her eyes away from the corner where he stood. She was angry with herself; she was caught like a girl of sixteen; Caught by the mystery about him.

"He'd be a wonderful lover!" she thought, dancing with Archie Landon, and she blushed softly.

Archie thought the blush was for him, but an instant later, whirling around in the dance he saw that they had been passing Mark Grant. Landon set his teeth.

"I'll get him out soon now!" he thought.

But he reckoned without his hostess. When another dance claimed Pam, he found himself near Mrs. Lynn.

She was gracious. "I want you to stay for dinner, Archie. I've just asked your friend Mr. Byram. He's so unusual. Mr. Burleson thinks him interesting. You're a good boy for bringing him here."

Landon reddened furiously. "I don't believe he can stay to dinner," he said hastily; "I know he's got an engagement—absolutely."

She looked frankly incredulous. "Why, Archie, he's just accepted! I sent him to tell Pam just now, so she wouldn't invite another person. We're twelve as it is."

"You sent him—" Landon prudently choked down the words; he was raging at the thought of Grant again with Pam. "The fellow's mad; he'll make love to her!" But aloud: "I'll speak to him about it."

"I shan't let him off," Mrs. Lynn replied coldly, "there's the telephone—he can cancel his engagement," and she turned to speed a parting guest.

Landon, caught in the throng about her, could not at first disengage himself. Then he saw Mark Grant leaning over Pam, his elbow rested on the high mantel, his fine head bent. Landon could not see his face, but hers was flushed and intent; she was drinking in Mark's words, whatever they were, with the wide intent eyes of a child. Landon raged again.

"Curse him!" he said to himself; "I'll have to get him out or break his neck!"

But to reach him through that crowd of fashionables, to get him away from Pam, seemed for a while impossible. Here and there Landon was greeted by friends and acquaintances. One woman asked for Teddy Banks, another having heard that the fine looking stranger was also a cousin of Landon's asked to have Mark brought to her house.

"He's so interesting," she said; "so unusual!"

Landon was in a white fury when he finally got Mark at the door of the smoking room. It was beyond the conservatory and the departing guests had drifted out of it. The room was empty save for the dissolving cloud of cigarette smoke. Landon beckoned to Mark.

"A word with you! he said hoarsely, closing the door; he was pale with rage.

Mark stood easily, facing him; there was a splendid vigor about him that Landon had not seen in his poor, rough and ready suit of clothes. It could not be said that clothes made the man, but the man shone radiantly through the clothes, there was something about him in this house broken, scented atmosphere—splendidly, heathenishly alive. He smiled at Archie's wrath.

"You've lost," he said casually; "I'm asked to dine."

"I know it," replied Landon fiercely, "but you won't—you'll go home!"

"Better take your defeat more calmly," counselled Mark; "you're not a good sport."

Landon gasped with anger. "I've watched you," he said thickly; "you've trespassed here—you've lasted too much. Now, you'll get out!"

Mark's eyes met his mockingly; for a moment their glances ground on each other like crossing steels, then he laughed.

"Listen—I've won and I'll stay; the dinner was the acid test, you know. Do you think they'd like you for trying to cheat them? If you drive me out, I'll tell them what you did—we'll go together."

Landon whitened yet more. "You've got to go," he raged; "I'll make you, you—paid impostor!"

Mark swung around in pagan fury; he seized him and shook him. Landon was big, but in the other's hands he might have been a reed. Mark threw him aside like a helpless puppy; then he slapped the money, five hundred dollars, down on the table.

"Take it, there's the price; it's infamous, unthinkable; I repudiate it! I'll stay because I'm asked; because I will! Go out there and tell your story—if she believes it Mrs. Lynn will show you the door!"

Landon knew it; he reeled unsteadily on his feet; he saw stars, his face was ghastly. He struck the money fiercely and flung it in the fire. As the flame caught it and the costly smoke went up he heard Mark's tormenting laugh.

"Tell them you've played a mean trick on your hostess; you've done a thing no gentleman should do; a thing to damn you socially; go and tell her! You'll suffer. I'll stay," said he with sudden passion, his eyes flashing their flame at Landon. "I'll stay—and you can't cut me out—the wager's won!"

Mark Grant kept his word. He stayed. In the first flush and exultation of his love for Pam he would have walked through fire to stay. But he had no such ordeal. Landon had felt his fingers on his shoulder, the pinch of them had left the young man's muscles sore. He wanted no more of that. He gnawed his rage in silence. He saw that he was trapped. If he told the truth to get Grant out, he would go out himself in disgrace. Strange to say, he had not thought of that, he had it to digest while he watched Mark's triumph at the dinner. This strange fellow; this heathen with iron fists, whoever he was, had found his tongue; he talked well. Not of travel and adventures, Landon noticed, but of life. He had a horribly lucid insight; he saw through people's motives, and he was well read. No one could question that. He had caught Burleson's interest—the great man, usually wearied and self-absorbed, listened to him with marked attention, studied him too, Landon thought, as if he searched his memory for that face.

As for Pam, she sat next to Mark and looked up at him with wide fascinated eyes. He was "so different"—that was what all the women thought. Mrs. Lynn, who liked a new lion first at her table, smiled across at Archie Landon. Her look said plainly: "Thank you; he's delightful!" And Archie gnawed again upon the bone of his wrath. How to get him out—that was the question. Mark, knowing it, threw him, once in a while a dare-devil look. But Mark himself was not as happy as he looked. The atmosphere of the place was like a hot-house, fragrant and warm—the glow of shaded lights—the soft voices of the women. Abruptly arose the vision of prison fare fifteen years of it. The dare-deviltry that had made him fling defiance at Landon melted in Pam's shining glance. What right had he, an ex-convict, to sit beside her, to touch her hand, to look into her eyes? A kind of fever seized him; once or twice it was in his mind to rise and shout the truth at them. Then Burleson held him from it—one of the men who had helped send him to prison; who, no doubt, like Fendick, believed him guilty. Covertly now he studied him; a gray face, a worn old man, grown mightily prosperous but not happy; he had lost his wife and three sons; riches alone weighed upon him. Did he ever think of the boy he had helped send to prison? It gave Mark a kind of impish satisfaction to sit at his table, only he wanted to shout his name at him—to defy him. Then Mrs. Lynn addressed him, smilingly.

"Mr. Byram, I want to ask you about Stella Byram's wedding. Were you there by any chance?"

Sugar Policy On Home Canning

More home canning is done in farm homes than in the homes of residents in urban centres, so the policy for this year with respect to sugar for canning or preserving is of particular interest to farm housewives.

The Wartime Prices and Trade Board has announced that five pounds of canning sugar can be secured with the first 5 "F" coupons in Ration Book No. 3 on or after May 25, and another 5 pounds can be obtained with "F" coupons after July 6, making 10 pounds of sugar per person as a minimum for canning. In addition, consumers have the alternative of using each of the 36 preserve coupons in Ration Books No. 3 and No. 4, when valid for purchase of half a pound of canning sugar. By using the sugar alternative for each of the preserves coupons 23 pounds of canning sugar per person during the year can be obtained. This is in addition to the regular weekly sugar ration of half a pound per person.

If a consumer chooses to buy preserves rather than put down fruit the "F" coupons can be exchanged for preserves coupons at Local Ration Boards after they become valid on May 25 and July 6.

COMMUNICATION

EXTENSION OF BANK CHARTERS DRAWS PROTEST

The Alberta Farmers' Union issued a statement Wednesday condemning Dominion government action in connection with renewal of Canadian bank charters for a further ten-year period.

"In the light of past experience it is useless for the minister of finance (Hon. J. L. Ilsley) to contend either that the Dominion government exercises any effective control over national monetary policy insofar as it affects individual citizens, or that the established monetary system is anything but anti-social and a national menace in its defective operation under a virtual private monopoly," the statement reads.

The union demands "that in no circumstances" shall bank charters be renewed by Parliament for a ten-year period, stating such charters should be granted only on a year-to-year basis until the requirements of post-war reconstruction indicate needed changes in the monetary system.

The statement asks that the year-to-year renewals should be granted until "an opportunity has been afforded the people of Canada to decide whether they will continue to tolerate the domination of their lives by a private credit monopoly which keeps them in perpetual debt and in virtual serfdom to its dictates."

It recalls that at the last A.F.U. convention, a resolution was passed which demanded that bank charters be not renewed.

"Notwithstanding the unanimity of public opinion expressed by this resolution, it has been completely ignored by the federal government. Instead the minister of finance in a thoroughly misleading eulogy of the banking system has brought forward a bill for the mere amendment of the Bank Act in a manner which will leave the Canadian people in general and the farmers in particular at the mercy of these institutions disastrous system.

"We have not forgotten that during the depression years the banks of the nation clamped down the lid of the national credit chest with which they were entrusted, creating havoc to the nation's economy and particularly to the farmers. It is significant that during those years the financial institutions alone thrived while the rest of the country's institutions were plunged into conditions bordering on bankruptcy."

H. G. NICHOLS,
Secretary Alberta Farmers' Union.

METHODS OF LEGUME INOCULATION

Legume inoculation may be effected by two general methods, states Dr. J. D. Newton, Department of Soils, University of Alberta.

(1) The application of pure cultures of nodule forming bacteria to the seed before sowing.

(2) The application of soil from an already inoculated field directly, or indirectly to the field to be inoculated.

The first method is the less cumbersome and enables the grower to use selected strains of bacteria. For this method cultures prepared by reliable commercial companies may be obtained from seed houses, and directions for application accompany each bottle or package of culture.

For the second method of inoculation soil should be taken from a field in which the same kind of legume as that to be inoculated is growing. Most of the bacteria are present in the top eight inches of the soil, but many of the bacteria in the top 2 inches may have been destroyed by drying or by direct sunlight. It is wise to discard the top two inches and take soil from the next four inches for inoculation purposes.

The soil may be sifted and drilled in, or scattered on the surface and harrowed in around the time of seeding the legume. Avoid exposure of the soil to direct sunlight any longer than is necessary. Between three hundred and five hundred pounds of soil per acre are required for this method.

Various modifications may be employed. Some of the moist soil may be sifted on to the legume seed, about four quarts per bushel) and thoroughly mixed with the seed, or a thin mud paste may be made and mixed with the seed until each individual seed is coloured by the paste. The sooner the seed is sown, the better. If seeding must be delayed for a few days the seed should be spread out to dry to prevent mould action. Neither infected seed nor soil should be long exposed to bright sunlight as this is very destructive to bacteria.

Farm Machinery Program Planned

Edmonton, May 23—While every possible consideration is being given to farmers' needs for equipment, supplies will still be limited to man power, critical materials and components that can be allocated, H. H. Bloom, Toronto, administrator of farm and construction machinery for the Wartime Prices and Trade Board, stated here in addressing implement dealers.

Mr. Bloom, who is also Canadian representative on the farm and food processing machinery committee of the Combined Production and Resources Board at Washington, further pointed out the urgent need of equipment for Britain and for relief of devastated liberated areas. Provision is being made to assign equipment to soldier re-establishment in Canada, he commented.

Quotas for the Canadian consumer in 1945, at slightly over 100 per cent of the total tonnage purchased by farmers in 1940 will still only meet most essential needs under present conditions. Rationing will continue to assure proper distribution, the administrator stated.

Mr. Bloom commented that quotas in Canada compare favourably to those in the United States.

FAMOUS PEOPLE

The conversation had turned to the subject of fraternal organizations. This went on until one of the ladies who hadn't been interested to start with, got bored with the whole thing. Suppressing a yawn, she remarked: "Well, I don't know anything about the Masons, but I do think their fruit jars are very nice."

WORLD OF WHEAT

By H. G. L. Strange

THE FARMERS' GOOD WORK

In spite of the severe lack of labour on prairie farms, the records reveal that our farmers this spring have sown a larger acreage to crops than ever has been done before in the history of the Prairie Provinces. The total sown to all grains this spring is 41,341,000 acres. The next highest sowing was in 1940, when 40,497,000 acres were seeded.

Comparing the sowings of each of the grains this year with those of 1940, we find that the acreage sown to wheat is 26 p.c. lower than in 1940 (the wheat acreage this year, however, is 28 per cent higher than for last year 1943) oats 42 per cent higher, barley 106 per cent higher, rye 58 per cent lower, flax 46 per cent higher, and the total acreage of all crops is 2 per cent higher this year than in 1940.

It is interesting to note that the considerable increases which have taken place in the sowings of oats, barley and flax during the war years have been, in the main, at the expense of wheat acreage, although to some slight extent also at the expense of rye.

This all shows, however, how well during these war years our farmers have changed their acreages from one crop to another in accordance with the recommendations and desires of the Government.

ANSWERS for Victory Gardeners

What Are Plant Lice That I Hear So Much About?

Plant lice is the term used commonly when referring to aphids. They are called plant lice because they cling to the plant like lice and live by sucking juices from the tender shoots, leaves and soft bark. They remain practically stationary after they once settle and give birth to young at the rate of 8 to 10 per day. These young are ready to do likewise in about two weeks. You can see how they multiply. Only the fact that nature destroys the aphids in huge quantity prevents their doing untold damage.

Where Do Plant Lice Come From In the First Place?

Plant lice or aphids have a peculiar way of starting their first generations in the spring. They hatch from eggs which have been hidden away on trash or in other safe places over winter. The first generation that hatches can fly and spreads about on favorite vegetation. The next generations are born without wings and continue on their host plant, giving birth to new generations.

You can begin to see why we recommend clearing up the garden late in the fall or very early in the spring, burning all trash, leaves and other material that might be used as a hiding place for aphid eggs and other insect carry overs.

Are All Garden Plants Attacked By Plant Lice?

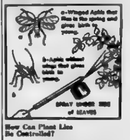
Just as there are many kinds of butterflies so there are many kinds of aphids—they are even of different colors. Some are black, some rose colored, some green. There is an aphid for almost every plant you will grow in the garden, and every aphid is a heavy eater, or we should say a heavy drinker, for he is a sap sucker and his food is taken in liquid form through his snout, which is especially built for the purpose.

Is Aphid Damage Really Serious?

Aphids can be terribly destructive. Scientists have counted in the neighborhood of 25,000 individual aphids on a single tomato plant. If you had 25,000 mosquitoes sitting on you night and day, constantly drawing blood, it would be a severe drain on your system. Your garden plants find this same drain on their life blood which is the sap.

Is There Any Other Damage From Plant Lice?

The plant louse or aphid, as we have said, operates by sticking his snout into the tender tissues of any part of the plant he can penetrate for the purpose of withdrawing sap. There is in the saliva of the plant louse an irritating substance that will almost ruin a crop.



a—Winged Aphid that flies in the spring and gives birth to young.
b—Aphid without wings that gives birth to young.
SPRAY UNDER SIDE of LEAVES

How Can Plant Lice Be Controlled?

Black Leaf 40 is death to plant lice, which it kills not only by contact but by fumes which arise under the foliage from the spray. You can spread all the lead arsenate you wish on the surface of the plant and yet do no harm to plant lice. They simply drill through and draw the fresh sap from beneath with their snouts. A contact spray is needed.

MUNICIPAL HOSPITALS—

THERE ARE DISTRIBUTED over the province of Alberta between thirty and forty Municipal Hospital Districts. These are of varying size, both as to the hospitals themselves and the area to be covered. Many have been in operation for many years, others are of fairly recent origin. Therefore when reading of, or discussing Municipal Hospital Districts, it should be kept in mind that the scheme is not new, that it has been tried over and over again and that records are available for any or all Municipal hospital districts.

Here at Tofield the municipal hospital question has come up periodically since 1919 or 1920 when a plan developed to the stage where a hospital district was laid out, a Provisional Board formed and an election held. At that time the proposed hospital district was much larger than the one proposed at present, going much farther east.

The origin of a Municipal hospital district often comes from one or more public spirited citizens who, having heard of the operation of some Municipal hospital, believe it to be a good thing for their own district, thus we have at the present time a movement, set on foot by the Tofield Community League, to establish a municipal hospital district here. Plans have gone so far forward as to have a district outlined and the Supervisor of Municipal Hospitals, Mr. Maxwell address a meeting at Tofield.

Any local committee having decided that a municipal hospital district is desirable may outline a proposed municipal hospital district. If the area chosen is acceptable to those concerned, a vote is arranged for, there first being appointed a Provisional Board whose duty it is to see that proper election procedure is followed. The authorization for a vote may be obtained in two different ways, either by obtaining signatures of twenty-five per cent of those concerned asking for a vote or by a resolution passed at Council meetings within the prescribed area. When the vote is taken sixty-five per cent of the votes must be in favor. If the plan is approved by sixty-five per cent of the voters, it goes into effect and location, site, building and other details follow in sequence. These are arranged for by the Provisional Board who have been appointed, but at the Municipal election following the setting up of the district, a Hospital Board is elected.

The taxation is in the neighborhood of $5 a quarter section as an average over the province. Here, according to the figures given it will be somewhat higher.

The area chosen for the proposed Tofield Municipal Hospital District is roughly seven full townships and four fractions of townships, comprising 175,805 acres. Its eastern boundary is Shonts, on the line between townships 17 and 18. Its western boundary is on the line between townships 20 and 21. It goes as far south as Kingman on its eastern boundary but only taking a part of townships 19 and 20, missing Kingman. To the north it goes as far as the line between ranges 52 and 53 taking in township 18 and 19, range 52, but not 20. It is an irregular shaped district, non too easy to describe.

The benefits ratepayers within the area will receive is hospitalization close to their homes at moderate cost. There is no fixed charge but a nominal charge of $1.00 per day is generally, though not always charged ratepayers.

Below we give some figures given by Mr. Maxwell to the meeting when he was here last week. As to cost it will be seen that the estimated mill rate is just under 5 mills and those residents who know their assessment can figure their probable hospital tax for themselves.

Weekly Editor Looks At Ottawa

By JIM GREENBLAT

How is Canada food-faring during the war years? Not badly at all. Despite rationing and certain shortages, civilian consumption of principal foods is at a higher level than pre-war years. According to "Canada at War" for April, in term of nutrients our diet generally is better, and here is how the 1943 consumption compares with the average for 1935-39; total meat plus 12 per cent; beef plus 29 per cent; milk products, excluding butter plus 18 per cent; eggs plus 24 per cent; butter minus 4 per cent and sugar minus 20 per cent.

With the eyes of Canada focused on the Health Insurance bill before Parliament, a recent health service survey is of interest, which shows an inequality of distribution in, principally, physicians. While urban areas and high income localities are not so badly off, there are many rural areas which have no doctors at all. This works a great hardship on the people, mainly affecting health of older people and the very young. By the way, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics estimates that persons sixty years and over will increase by 20 per cent in the next ten years. In March, 1943 Canada had 11,020 physicians, 2006 of which were in the armed forces. The ratio of increase of physicians has not kept pace with population as shown by a comparison of the year 1901 when we had 5475 for 5,371,315 population; in 1941 it was 11,130 for 11,506,655 or one doctor for every 1034 of population. In the United States it was one for 794. The main problem is one of distribution it appears. It is notable, however that in 1943 Canada had provided 4.5 physicians for every 1000 men and women in the armed forces.

There apparently is a pressing need for officers ad seamen to sign agreements with Merchant Seamen's Manning Pools established in Canada to engage for service for the duration of the war or for two years, whichever is the lesser period, on foreign-going ships of Canadian registry. The Canadian government has arranged to operate a number of ships constructed in this country and a continuous flow of trained seamen is, of course, necessary. As a special inducement merchant seamen so signing will be provided once a year with round trip transportation at a cost to the seamen of one-third of the single first class or coach fare, for their annual leave.

An enemy of food production on our farms is the lowly weed. The department of agriculture shows what can happen if weeds are left to go to seed. For instance a single plant of wild mustard, stinkweed, foxtail or pigweed produces from 10,000 to 30,000 seeds; shepherd's purse will run as high as 50000 and the tumbling mustard about 1,500,000. What could a field chuck full of them do?

Approved by German authorities, pamphlets have been forwarded to Berne, Switzerland for distribution to Canadian prisoners of war in Germany. Subjects covered deal with advice to the next-of-kin, handling of the home pay account; insurance assignments, disposal of credit balances; rate of exchange; advances of pay by the detaining power; disposal of personal effects; promotions; mail and parcels; educational facilities and rehabilitation benefits. The pamphlet will help the camp spokesman or Senior Canadian in advising the lads of arrangements made on their behalf by the various departments of government concerned with their welfare.

Reduction of the butter ration for Canadians, temporarily in June, is influenced by the fact that output during the first four months of this year declined 12.4 per cent or nearly eight million pounds as compared with the same period a year ago. As against this our record of cheese production for the same period showed an increase of 27.8 per cent. The subsidy of 30 cents a hundred pounds has a big bearing on that, undoubtedly.

When the tea and coffee ration upped 40 per cent recently it is quite likely that tea was more welcome to farm workers than urban workers, and or coffee vice versa. An unofficial estimate is that 90 per cent of farmers drink tea.

SCOUTS FEED FAMINE VICTIMS

During the terrible famine in the state of Bengal in India, a group of Boy Scouts from a neighbouring state ran a food kitchen, feeding from 300 to 600 people daily. An 11 year old Wolf Cub took on the job of feeding the babies.

These Unpredictable Prairies

There are few areas in the world where conditions change so quickly for better or for worse as on these prairies. That is why it is so unsafe to make predictions. Indeed speaking somewhat facetiously, some have often remarked "Find out what most people feel sure will happen and you can be reasonably certain that it won't but apart from that almost anything can occur." A year ago, for instance, tight and small quotas were allotted to farmers for the deliveries of wheat to elevators, and in view of the small amount of space available in country elevators, and the large amount of surplus wheat in store on farms, it seemed then as though these quotas would be imposed for years to come, and yet at this moment it appears almost certain that soon all quotas will be removed.

A year ago, too almost everyone was talking about the burdensome wheat surplus in the world, and yet today many are talking about a possible deficiency of wheat for human needs. A short time ago many thought that the 187 million bushels of surplus wheat stored on farms on Aug 1st last would take years to show any decrease, yet today it is decreasing at a rapid rate.

A few months ago there was a decided shortage of railway freight cars, and so cars were sparingly allotted to Elevator Companies by what was termed a "car cycle." Many thought "car cycles" would last for the duration of the war, yet today the necessity for these "car cycles" has passed.

During the drought years of the "thirties" it was the common belief that the climate of the prairies had changed, that the winds, which it was said carried moisture from the south, "had changed direction to originate from the deserts in Mexico". There was no hope, it was declared, for good yields in the future, and yet in a few years, while people were still talking about the serious drought, normal rains came again.

Another common belief was that farmers, by their alleged stupid "wheat mining" methods, had depleted the soil of fertility, and that this feature alone would prevent normal yields from ever again being produced; yet when good rains eventually came these same fields produced crops as high yielding as had ever been enjoyed in the whole history of the West. We have noted, too, that whenever generous rains occurred in the spring many predicted a bumper crop, which however sometimes failed to result because of drier periods later in the season. Conversely, too when rains were lacking in the spring some predicted a lean crop. Yet the records reveal that often a good crop was eventually harvested because most generous rains fell later in the season.

Noting the number of overseas markets for Canadian wheat and flour which had been shut off by the war, many forecasted that Canadian sales of wheat would be lower during the war years than they had been for long past, yet we now find that exports of wheat and flour may this year be astonishingly high.

Considering all this, therefore, apparently all that can be predicted with certainty about our prairie provinces is that "You Never Can Tell"; almost anything can happen and only too frequently what does happen is that which few expect. About the only thing to do therefore, is to keep an open mind about rainfall, crops, surpluses, sales and exports, upon all of which the well being of these prairies depends, and to be prepared to meet any contingency as it occurs and certainly not to "Cry Havoc" while at least there is a chance that any existing poor condition can be rectified.—Searle Grain Company, Ltd.

GARDINER OPTIMISTIC

(National Liberal Federation)

Montreal, May 22 Canadian farmers will be sure of ample post-war markets for their surplus products if the peoples of the world are properly fed, Hon. James G. Gardiner, Minister of Agriculture in the Mackenzie King Cabinet, told the Kiwanis Club here. The duty of all Canadians, is to work toward a post-war arrangement between nations which will establish prosperity for all.

"No country alone can have prosperity by itself" Hon. Mr. Gardiner continued "and in order to be a prosperous nation we must live in a prosperous world; to be a satisfied nation we must live in a satisfied world; to be a contented nation we must live in a contented world!

"To have peace in the world, we must have people who understand one another and who know that other nations are attempting to assist them in their way of life, just as much as they are attempting to assist themselves. If we follow these principles, we shall not only have a market for our goods, but peace in the world for a longer time than has ever been experienced before."

Isolationism had caused the war, said the Minister; and isolation must be banished after this war. The governmental policies of Canada during the war had been directed to trying to make certain that, when the war is over, all nations will work together. It was a great comfort he went on for the present government to know that it could count on the support of the virile farming population whose war effort had astounded the world and whose desire for a finer Canada and a finer world after the war had been expressed many times.

In a tribute to the people of the Dominion for their sound thinking in days of stress, Hon. Mr Gardiner said

"In Canada, without changing a syllable in our constitution, without sacrificing anything we owe to history, without scrapping the freedom of the press or speech, without dragging our honest differences of opinion on political matters into questions upon which we can all agree, we, the Canadian people, have conducted this war to the point where we can look to the future with confidence."

BUILDING for VICTORY and AFTERWARDS

— Canadian Pacific Chief Executive Reviews Company's Mighty War Effort

D. C. Coleman, LL.D., D.C.L.

The annual meeting of the Canadian Pacific Railway is one of those events which mark, as few others do, the year to year progress of the country's business. On that occasion, early this month, the address to the shareholders presented by D. C. Coleman, Chairman and President, briefly reviewed the achievements of the past twelve months, at the same time drew attention with particular emphasis to dangers that would appear to threaten the orderly and satisfactory development of the country's industry and commerce.

It was the 63rd annual general meeting of the most important transportation link in the British Empire, and the fifth during which all its great resources primarily had been devoted to the battle for civilization.

"The company's directors have regarded it as a privilege", said Mr. Coleman, "that all the resources of the Company should be devoted to the achievement of victory. Now that ultimate victory is assured, we may justifiably look back with satisfaction upon its continued success in fulfilling its share of the heavy responsibility of maintaining vital links of transportation and communication both within and without the boundaries of the Dominion. During the war years the tasks efficiently accomplished by the Canadian Pacific have continued to increase in number and importance, culminating in the record-breaking performance of the past year.

"Gross earnings reached the record height of $297 millions, notwithstanding successive increases in operating costs, the traffic has been carried at pre-war rates despite the fact that during the fifteen years previous to 1939 many reductions had been made in the charges for certain classes of traffic. Had we enjoyed in 1943 the same average revenue per ton mile and per passenger mile as in 1924, gross earnings would have been higher by $35 millions. While freight traffic had doubled and passenger traffic has trebled since the commencement of the war, increased labor costs, increased prices for material and higher taxation have had the effect of offsetting all the benefits of improved unit performance resulting from the increased traffic volume.

In each year since the commencement of the war, freight, passenger and other railway traffic had continued to expand. In this period the Company had transported more than 215 million tons of freight and 35 million passengers, a stupendous accomplishment, made possible by the free association of three important groups, each making an essential contribution to mutual Canadian interests. These three were the company's patrons, its employees and its investors.

In referring to the future of air services in Canada, Mr. Coleman said that the decision of the Government to separate the air line companies from the railroads was most disappointing. He pointed out that the Canadian Pacific Air Lines had made a distinct contribution to aviation in this country by taking over a number of struggling and scattered companies and welding them into a closely knit, efficient organization, without encroaching on the field reserved by law for Trans-Canada Air Lines—that it had proceeded throughout with the knowledge of the Government, and in compliance with Government regulations and that it had been of substantial aid to the Canadian, United States and United Kingdom Governments in operations in Northern Canada, Alaska and Labrador, and in initiating the first Trans-Atlantic ferry service.

The company's officers were now preparing plans and policies to meet the problems which would arise in the era of post-war adjustment. "We are confident", he said, "that Canada, possibly not without some set backs and some painful experience, will then enter upon a period of expansion and industrial development. In this country, as in others, there is considerable activity in the ranks of those who maintain that the fruits of prosperity can only be properly distributed through measures of rigid state control, and that free enterprise, as we have known it, should be systematically extinguished.

In dealing with those who would confine Canada's economic and industrial structure within a system of rigid state control Mr. Coleman referred to the class, occupational and sectional jealousies being fostered and the encouragement given young people to form organized pressure groups to struggle with the state and with each other for a sharing of wealth which they are not encouraged or urged to create.

"If those behind this movement were entrusted with executive power, they would find that to satisfy the appetites they have inflamed, and to reconcile conflicting claims which they have fostered would be a task beyond their powers", he told the meeting.

"Injustices in division or distribution, as they become apparent, should be and must be corrected, but it should be fairly obvious that if our standard of living is to be improved or even maintained at the present level, more wealth must be created for ultimate division. No man has been able to show," he went on, "that as much wealth can be produced under state control of production and distribution as under a system of free enterprise."

NORTH COOKING LAKE

Although the 24th of May was a day of clouds and mud, many people arrived on the train to visit their friends and relatives.

The Cooking Lake School children had Monday as a holiday instead of Wednesday. Many of the students stayed home on Wednesday though, as many of their relatives came out to see them.

A hit and run ball game was played at Deville on Sunday. Many young people were present which made the game very exciting. Let's keep the fun a rolling.

Miss McGihon, the Cooking Lake Junior Room teacher is back teaching again after an absence of nearly three weeks.

ANSWERS for Victory Gardeners

What Are the Most Important Enemies of the Gardener?

No garden will be successful unless defended against weeds and insects. The hoe and the sprayer are the two weapons most important in "garden defense." They should be used regularly and in the proper manner. Too often Victory G[illegible] start out enthusiastically to raise their own garden vegetables. The next thing [illegible] know their project gets to be [illegible] work. The sun is hot, the weeds begin to take over and pesky insects move in and invite all their relatives to partake of the bountiful banquet spread before them in the way of tender vegetables.

What Harm Do Weeds Do In the Garden?

Weeds are thieves. They steal the moisture and plant food from your crop. The soil is a reservoir from which the garden plants draw their sustenance. Every weed that runs its roots into that reservoir draws away the things your crop needs for good growth. Few soils will feed a crop of weeds and a crop of garden vegetables at the same time.

How Can I Prevent a Growth of Weeds in the Garden

Weeds grow from seeds. If weeds are kept down year by year so that no seed falls your weed problem is partly solved although there always seems to be some coming up no matter how you fight. The problem in the main is solved by cultivation and by hoeing. Weeds should be destroyed as they come up before they have time to attain a size where they do damage by robbing your crop. Burning garden trash helps to destroy both weed seeds and insects. However many weeds drop their seeds as soon as they ripen and you have to be careful that in gathering stray weed stocks you do not broadcast weed seed.

What Insects Are Most Harmful to the [illegible]?

Any insect seen in the garden should be looked upon as an enemy till proven otherwise. Some are more harmful than others. All insects are harmful that eat leaves, flowers or tender shoots. Likewise they are harmful if they suck sap from the tissues. The plant needs all [illegible] substance and can spare none for support of insects. In various sections of the country [illegible] pests are found. Some insects such as aphids are almost universal, however, [illegible] are found on almost all types of vegetation. Watch for the little green plant lice (aphis) and attack them at once when they appear. They look harmless but can do great damage if allowed to multiply.

How Should Insects Be Combatted?

As soon as the plants get large enough to act as a harbor for insects they should be sprayed. For chewing insects use lead arsenate. For sucking insects use Black Leaf 40. Full directions will be given later in these columns as to how to use these products which are very simple to handle and will do a splendid clean up job.

Malting Barley

Farmers usually sow barley quite late, but experiments have shown that to obtain the malting grades, barley must be sown quite early and on clean land. Above all the seed must be free from oats.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

[illegible]

MANY COOKING POINTERS

"Keep cool"—good advice in an emergency and applicable to many foods including eggs, for the sooner new-laid eggs are placed in a cool temperature, the better they keep.

Egg shells are semi-porous but nature has provided a protective film which helps keep out air and odours. Washing removes this film and for that reason eggs should not be washed until just before using. Spots should be rubbed off with a rough, dry cloth.

As a low temperature is required for storing, so, for cooking eggs or egg dishes, the temperature should be low, below boiling point for so-called 'boiled' and poached eggs. Sponge cakes, meringues, etc., call for low oven heat and custards, souffles and other egg dishes are set in a pan of hot water while cooking in the oven.

Many an other perfect pie is spoiled by a meringue which is tough or thin and watery. The home economists of the Consumer Section of the Dominion Department of Agriculture say that egg whites yield greatest volume when not too cold and the least little bit of fat in the bowl or on the beater or from a tiny bit of egg yolk will prevent the whites from beating stiff. If a yolk does break in separating, every last trace should be removed and a bit of the egg shell is the handiest tool for the job. The whites should be whipped until they hold a soft peak and look glossy but not dry. Too much beating is as bad as too little. A pinch of salt and a little acid—a couple of drops of lemon juice, a pinch of baking powder or cream of tartar—helps whites to hold their stiffness and give a better volume. On an electric beater egg whites should be beaten at medium speed. Sugar should be beaten in gradually after whites are stiff and the meringue should be piled lightly on the partially cooked filling and baked at once in a slow oven.

That far-resounding flight
That stirs the higher spheres
This lovely morn of May,
Of power speaks, of honor, faith and right,
The truth-enlightened sway
That triumphs down the years.

Our thoughts are with the brave
Who guard the Nation's stand
For faith and freedom's cause;
On crucial fields, on wing or ocean wave
The loyal tension draws
The free from land to land—

To thwart the deadly foe
And reign of cruel night,
And hard oppression's chain,
'Til neath God's Hand the calm horizon's glow,
While commerce shines the plain,
The sea and mountain height.

ECONOMY OF PLENTY

(Robert Newton, President, University of Alberta)

Nearly every plan put forward for the post-war period is based on the necessity for full employment. Well and good. But too often we find authors proposing schemes to "create" employment. What we should be doing is scheming to raise the standard of living. The expanding needs of the people under a constantly rising standard of living would "create" incidentally sufficient employment for all.

Fortunately we have in the Atlantic Charter this constructive viewpoint. The United Nations conference on food and agriculture at Hot Springs, Virginia, based its proposals on a proper level of nutrition for all the nations of the world. This means international co-operation and a free exchange of commodities. It means also an expanding agriculture, with a prospect of relief for this distressed industry, and the possibility that farmers may at last achieve their legitimate goal of parity prices.

In our rural community the primary problem is the farmer rather than farming. We have rarely failed to produce all that the market would buy at a fair price, but we have often failed to give the farmer a reasonable opportunity to lead a happy and contented life. A visiting professor of philosophy said in an address to our summer school this year, "Happiness to the farmer consists in bath tubs and electricity." If by raising the farmer's income through slightly better prices for his pr[illegible] we made it possible for him to [illegible] these modern conveniences, we should set in motion such a cycle of industry as would substantially increase employment in urban centres for many postwar years.

We should not stop with social security schemes, such as [illegible] Beveridge or Marsh plans. In spite of their fabulous costs, these after all guarantee only a minimum standard of living and social services, an insurance against the vicissitudes of life. The importance of planning for security should not deflect us from the still greater task of planning for prosperity. Our aim should be to insure a minimum of public need for relief and an optimum standard of living.

We are richly endowed with physical resources. They are a trust to us to develop wisely for ourselves and those who follow. But "there is a spirit in man," and only by nurturing this first of all can we hope to achieve that well-rounded nationhood that is our birthright.

Friend Of Youth Passes Suddenly

(Country Life, B.C.)

In the sudden passing recently of Mr. R. W. Pincott of Nanaimo, B.C. young people and the agricultural movement in British Columbia lost a devoted supporter and ardent worker. Words do not adequately express the feeling of loss that those who knew and [illegible] with him feel. He will not be easy to replace at the Council Table or as a Friend. Many will feel that they would like to express themselves as Don Wilson, a friend [illegible] colleague of Mr. Pincott, has ably done in the following words.

"Raymond W. Pincott has left us. As years go he was with us only a short time; but in that brief space of time he accomplished much. He gave of his time, willingly, and progressively, to help agriculture. He was a friend of Youth, quick to champion its cause, generous with his support, and never failing in enthusiasm.

"His knowledge and his ability with the pen made him invaluable to farmer organizations. When secretarial work was to be done, when legal advice was needed, or when many other farmer problems had to be dealt with, it was always the same answer, 'Let's get Pincott to help us.' 'Pincott' never failed us, he was with us to the last; working for the farmers, fighting for the farmers, dying for the farmers. Through it all he was happy; happy because he was doing [illegible] that he [illegible] best; doing [illegible] bit for agriculture.

"Yes, we will miss him, but if he could have spoken to us before he [illegible] away he would have said, 'Boys, carry on'. Let's not let him down."

The absentee problem in Berlin is acute. Every day a few more factories fail to show up for work.

STRIKING FACTS ABOUT T.B. IN THE TOFIELD DISTRICT

The people of Tofield and district are being asked for their active co-operation in an important community project—that of trying to completely eliminate tuberculosis from this district.

Consumption, or Tuberculosis, is a disease caused by a germ, tubercle bacillus. It is a disease which at its onset gives no symptoms. Indeed, months or years may elapse before symptoms develop. Complete cure is only possible if the infection is [illegible] early.

On the other hand tuberculosis is a disease that can be controlled. Through the activity of various public bodies the death rate from tuberculosis has been cut down to one quarter of that in year 1900. However, a greater effort on the part of everyone is necessary before the situation in respect to this disease is considered satisfactory.

Here are some facts that should interest everyone:

1. Between the ages of 15 and 45 tuberculosis kills more persons than any [illegible]

2. For every person that dies from tuberculosis 9 others are infected.

3. In Canada [illegible] persons died from tuberculosis last year.

4. 50,000 persons are actively sick with T.B. at this moment in Canada.

5. Out of every 1000 men and women examined for the armed forces 10 were found to have tuberculosis.

IN OUR OWN DISTRICT:

1. There are 24 cases of tuberculosis on our records.

2. Three people died from T.B. in the last year.

3. Three new cases were reported in the last five months.

4. No one in our district is further than 12 miles from the home of a tuberculosis case.

To an intelligent individual the above facts should give a great deal of concern. People such as teachers, business men, food handlers, clerks and others who meet the general public in their daily work have not only greater chances of becoming infected but also of spreading the infection.

For some [illegible] many public-spirited people have given earnest consideration to the possibility of making greater progress in the matter of controlling T.B. or even of eradicating the disease completely. In fact, two A.T.A. Sub-Locals requested some such program. At last we are able to announce such an opportunity. As stated above, early tuberculosis gives no symptoms but it can be spotted by a chest x-ray. We have been promised by the Provincial Department of Health, Tuberculosis Division, a FREE chest x-ray for every man, woman and child, twelve years of age and over within this district. This means that if steps are taken to see that all people within the territory avail themselves of this opportunity, your Medical Health Officer will know of every case of tuberculosis in the Health Unit. Only by detecting and treating every case may further infection and death from this disease be prevented.

The Mobile X-Ray Unit will be in Holden, Tofield and Viking. We do not as yet know the exact date of its appearance at these points, but the date will be announced as soon as definite arrangements are made.

We are trying to enlist the active co-operation of the Local Papers, Municipal Councils, School Boards, Women's Organizations, Red Cross [illegible] Church Organizations, Clergy, School Teachers, and any other public spirited groups or individuals who wish to help. The rural school teachers have been asked already to begin organizing in their communities.

In Towns and Villages several groups will have to work together because of the greater task. The object is to have everyone twelve years and over persuaded to get x-rayed. In the country districts committees will have the additional task of arranging for transportation.

Please do not wait. Start to organize now so that when the day of the clinic is announced, your district will turn out one hundred per cent strong. Can you do it? Show us you can. No amount of effort in this connection is too great. Such an opportunity for Community Welfare was never offered to you before.

LAKESHORE

The War Workers' Club members are so busy gardening, raising chickens and turkeys, etc., and a lot more etc. that the meeting for May has been postponed. Members will not postpone writing those monthly letters to the boys overseas, we're sure of that, no matter how busy they are. One or two have reported recently sending cigarettes to their "adopted" boy in uniform—a good idea since it takes an average of 3 months for parcels to reach the boys in the C.M.F. And if we really think the war will be over in Europe this year we should back our faith with works and get the letters and comforts over there while the boys are fighting their hardest and need them most. Whenever the club meeting is held in June it will be at Mrs. Eaton's, and don't forget to keep track of the cost of parcels, cigarettes or anything you send overseas as a member of the club, then hand in your statement at the next meeting.

The Ladies' Aid is planning a "ball game evening" similar to those held last year, with hot dogs, [illegible] doughnuts for everybody at the school on June 23.

CHAPTER IX

Released from prison after serving fifteen years for a murder he didn't commit, Mark Grant goes to the office of a lawyer named Fosdick to collect a legacy left to him while he was in prison. When Fosdick tells him he will have to wait, Mark accepts an invitation to a party to help Teddy Banks win a $1,000 bet with Archie Landon. Mark is to get $500 and new clothes. Although Mark has told him his real name, Archie introduces him to his hostess, Mrs. Lynn, as "Stewart Byram." Mark meets and falls in love with Pamela Rodney. Jealous of Mark's attentions to Pamela, Archie calls him an imposter and Mark returns the money but remains at the party. He learns that Burleson, the man who sent him to prison is at the party but Burleson does not recognize him and all is well until Mrs. Lynn suddenly asks him if, by any chance, he was at Stella Byram's wedding.

Mark lifted his head. "No, I wasn't there by any chance. I don't know her, Mrs. Lynn."

His hostess looked perplexed. "But she should be your cousin; there are so few Byrams. You must come in on the Tom Byram side?"

Mark caught the gleeful malice in Landon's eyes.

"No," he replied flatly, "not on any side. You're mistaken, Mrs. Lynn, I'm not related to the Utica Byrams."

She was a little taken aback. But a woman of the world passes such things over lightly, she turned the conversation swiftly, though her eyes flashed one keen question at Landon. He reddened and moved uneasily in his chair. It was Pam who spoke softly to Mark.

"I'm so glad! Those Utica Byrams are so stodgy. I didn't see how you could belong!"

"I might be a hop out of kin, you know," he answered quickly, and then, in an undertone: "Suppose I'm not a Byram at all; what then?"

"Oh, but it's your name!" she laughed, as if at a huge joke.

"But if it wasn't my name?"

She lifted her shining eyes, mischief in them. "What was it Juliet said? 'A rose by any other name?'"

"Do you remember about that?" he asked her daringly.

"The play?" she laughed outright; "of course I do!"

"With Romeo it was love at first sight," said Mark.

Again the flame that played in his eyes held hers. She drew a quick breath, smiling, clinging desperately to the conventions. She did not know that prison had made a pagan of him, like a pagan he was wooing her, and he knew he had no right to do it. The dinner ended too soon for him. He outstayed the other guests. There was music and a little dancing again. Burleson took a few off to the opera. Pam taught Mark some dancing steps in the deserted ballroom. Landon had been carried off against his will by Burleson. Mrs. Lynn was in the drawing room.

"I can't see where you could have been!" Pam laughed. "Why, you know steps I never heard of—and not one I know!"

"No-man's-land has only one — the lock step," Mark replied recklessly.

He might have stayed too late but for Mrs. Lynn's entrance. She sent him away, still graciously. If he was not a Utica Byram he was something of a man. She was woman enough under her worldliness to be a little thrilled by that. Before she knew what she was doing she had told him her days at home.

"But, of course, Archie will bring you," she smiled, suddenly cooling.

Pam said nothing. She had told him all three things already, and another: she was in the habit of riding her pet horse in the park, mornings. This was something Archie Landon did not know, she did not want Landon and Banks there! It was after he left the house that Mark had his bad quarter of an hour. He had gone there as an imposter, on the wager of two worthless boys, under an assumed name. It would be black enough for a mere joke, but he was an ex-convict. Given that, and they found him out, he would deserve something worse than mere expulsion.

"A man does mad things when he's in love!" he thought.

But it troubled him. He tramped the streets, thinking of it, wretched at heart. It was past midnight when he went in search of Teddy Banks. He wanted his own clothes. Besides it was part of the bargain to report to the young scapegrace. He found Banks alone and sulky—his rooms, a bachelor's suite, thick with cigarette smoke.

"I won," said Mark beginning to take off his coat.

Banks stared at him, biting his cigarette.

"I know! Archie's been here, ripping mad. What the deuce did you do there, anyway?"

"Got asked to dinner. Did he pay his wager?"

Teddy nodded. "He did, and swore he'd like to murder me! Come, what happened? Tell me! It's beastly to be shut out of the fun and only get a ragging from a churchmouse."

"Nothing happened. I was well received and asked to dinner."

"By the great lady herself?" Teddy slapped his knee, laughing uproariously. "What did I say? Any fellow with a clean shirt! I got my money out of Archie."

He went over this again and again, giggling at it. Mark, sick with disgust of him, soiled by the thought that this boy had opened the door to love for him changed back into his own rough suit, flinging the borrowed raiment down. The violence of the action drew Teddy's eyes.

"Archie says you threw back five hundred dollars. Why?"

"You'd better ask me why I took it in the first place," Mark retorted bitterly. "I think I was mad."

Some remnant of conscience stirred in young Banks.

"It was only for tonight!" he called after him thickly. "Only for tonight, that's flat, remember—you can't go back there, you know!"

Mark thought the boy had been drinking again. He did not answer. He shut the door on him and went out to walk the streets all night. There was even an exhilarating freedom in doing it.

Presently a glow showed in the eastern sky; against it the skyscrapers were blocked out in strange pyramidal shapes. The city lights went out; the day dawned.

It was nine o'clock when Mark Grant, sleepless and breakfastless, went back to Fosdick's office. Today he would receive his aunt's legacy. It would give him the means to go away. He remembered his relief at that thought yesterday; today it means exile!

Fosdick, coming in to find him there waiting, was no more cordial than on the previous day. But he took the matter up; it was apparent that his idea was to get done with it and Mark.

"You'll have some papers to sign," he said bluntly. "Come over to the courthouse; there are formalities."

Fosdick showed scant courtesy, but the money was intact—thanks to the little lawyer's scrupulous care.

"I wouldn't have her leave it to you if I'd had my way," he said bluntly, as they closed the business up.

Mark reddened in spite of himself. "Mr. Fosdick, do you remember Herbert Burleson?"

The lawyer shot another look at him. "Sure, I do! He's the great Burleson, now. Why d'you ask?"

"I saw him yesterday."

Fosdick started and then he remembered that it might have been the merest chance. He nodded. "Very likely. He's got kind of a palace here."

Mark, folding some papers in his pocket assented thoughtfully. "He was with my uncle that last day; he knew there was no quarrel between us. He could have testified for me."

Fosdick drummed on his desk. "It's too late to think of that," he said coldly.

"I tried to bring it out; no one believed me."

Fosdick shrugged. "Are you trying to imagine Burleson will clear you now?"

Mark rose. He had money in his pocket; he looked grimly down at the sneering little man.

"A man has a right to fight for his life, Mr. Fosdick. I'm young still. I've got red blood in me—I'm going to fight for my life."

Fosdick looked him over thoughtfully. For the first time he seemed to realize the man who had come back. There was power in the figure and the face; Mark stood upright, unashamed. In spite of himself the little lawyer was impressed. But he fingered the paper on his desk impatiently; he was not one to admit he had been touched by anything.

"Better go west and live it down," he advised dryly; "no easy thing to dig up evidence after fifteen years. It would take your twenty thousand all right. I suppose — when you find the evidence —" he grinned— "you'll set up your claim to the Barton fortune."

"Yes," said Mark slowly—"then I might—but not until then. Good day, Mr. Fosdick."

The lawyer nodded curtly, but he turned in his chair and followed the young man with his eyes. For the first time a doubt had stirred in him. Plenty of innocent people suffered—but, pshaw! This boy had been fairly tried. It was a plain murder for money. He was hard up at the time, and he was his uncle's heir. Fosdick pursed his lips. He had not tried to claim the fortune yet; it was rolling up; but he would—of course he would! He nodded to himself and went back to his work. He had always believed Mark guilty.

Mark had set his face westward. It seemed the natural destiny of men such as he. Perhaps that vague country which used to be termed "out West" by easterners, was no longer vague and no longer offered as great opportunities for rehabilitation; a man could scarcely expect in these days, to get out of touch with the things he left behind him, and there were no more great fortunes within easy reach of pick and shovel, but there would be a greater space to breathe, to live down the past.

He went steadily about it, he had long ago half shaped his probable course. Now he looked up localities, recalled the advice that his friend, the warden, had given him, and even went so far as to inquire the price of railway fares. Yet he did not go. Days had passed and he had held to his resolution. He had never returned to the Burleson house. Better that Pam should think him uncouth, uncivilized, than that he should transgress again. The thought of his reckless entrance there, his violation of all the amenities of social life, made his cheeks burn. He loved the girl, it was no romance of a day, and because it was real, because it was a thing above and apart from the rest of his life, he would see her no more. The suffering was his. The surprise and annoyance might be hers, but she would soon forget! He would not go there, but he could not go away. Each day he said to himself "tomorrow!" Tomorrow he stayed. Night after night, he walked around the square on which the Burleson house stood; day after day he put off his journey. It was folly—it was madness—but the spell held him. Pam's eyes, her voice, the touch of her small hand, haunted him. To go away from the city where she dwelt would be exile. There was always a chance here of a glimpse of her, himself unseen. Once he did so see her. She was going out with Mrs. Lynn, in the Burleson car. He glimpsed her face, a little pale, framed in a great hat, the furs muffling her; he saw her pass and the day was changed for him. After that, he did not plan to go for three days. Once he saw Landon going to the house, and hated the boy for it. "He has no right there—after what he did!" Mark thought hotly, and grew hotter when he realized the part he, himself, had played. Once he saw Pam on horseback in the park. Screened by the trees he watched her in the sunshine and thought her the most beautiful thing in the world! That day he nearly broke his resolution. It seemed as if he must speak to her. That night he summoned himself to the bar of his own judgment and condemned himself. No honest man would have gone into another's house under a false name and made love to an innocent girl. He would go West in the morning.

SUPPLEMENTARY FEEDS NECESSARY FOR COWS ON PASTURE

The importance of good pastures is appreciated by all successful dairymen. An abundance of green, succulent forage, such as only pastures can provide will stimulate the production of a maximum quantity of milk and butterfat at low cost.

It must be remembered, however, that grasses are a bulky feed. Grasses are highly nutritious on the basis of dry matter, but owing to the amount of water they contain they must be classed as a succulent roughage. The average sized cow is able to consume only enough grass for maintenance and production of two gallons of milk daily. Cows with the ability to produce a larger quantity of milk must be provided with additional feed in concentrated form if production is to be maintained at the most efficient level.

While it is true that pasture feeding may stimulate the production of more milk than is indicated by the amount of food consumed while on pasture, such production can only result by the using of reserve flesh carried by the cows. If this is allowed to happen, production will be unnecessarily reduced later in the lactation period irrespective of the efforts made to maintain it. Milk cows work hard almost the year round, and do their best when in fair flesh. Oats, with small amounts of barley or wheat added make cheap and satisfactory grain mixtures for milk cows on pasture.

WORLD OF WHEAT
By H G.L. Strange

WHEAT SURPLUS AND DEFICIENCY

A short time ago everyone was talking about a world wheat surplus that, it was said, could not be cleared for years to come; yet today fears are being expressed of a possible shortage of wheat.

The truth is there is no reason for either of these fears, provided natural governing forces are permitted to function. The governing forces are PRICE and FREE TRADE. Whenever there is a surplus, if price is permitted naturally to fall somewhat, then bread and flour become cheaper, people use more, and the surplus would soon be cleared if trade is free; and conversely when there is fear of a shortage, if price is permitted to rise, then people use less wheat, flour and bread, and feed less to livestock, so again the condition soon corrects itself. Today much wheat is being fed to livestock. Any wheat deficiency, therefore, could soon be corrected by using less wheat for animal feeding by, if necessary, reducing livestock production. In war-time this is easily done by tightening up rationing on meats, which would not seriously harm anyone on this continent.

When cereal grains are fed to livestock an acre of land will feed only one quarter as many people as when the grains are made into flour, bread or porridge for direct human consumption.

HOG PASTURES

As a pasture for hogs Alfalfa is excellent. It is so valuable a feed that the hog producer in a region where this plant thrives should use it for pasture in summer and hay in winter.

Two annual crops that have been found suitable as hog pastures are rape, and a mixture of oats and winter rye. Rape has the greater carrying capacity, but with a cereal pasture there is less danger of sunscald on young pigs.

Two bushels of oats mixed with one bushel of rye offers a forage crop that can be seeded early and will produce pasture until after freeze-up in November. The oats in the mixture provide greenfeed from spring until midsummer. The fall rye will supply pasture from late summer until late fall if not too heavily grazed.

Calgary, June 1—Cheques totalling $397,734.52 were mailed today by the Alberta Wheat Pool to members who delivered grain to Pool elevator facilities in the crop year 1942-43. This payment was a refund of excess charges at the rate of one cent a bushel.

Since the year 1925 when the first Alberta Pool Elevators were built, the distribution of patronage dividends, including the present payment, has totalled $2,920,306.62. In 1925 there were three Alberta Pool country elevators. Today the number is 434.

CONTROL OF THISTLES

Here is a suggestion from our Supervisor of Weed control on the treatment of thistles.

Canada thistle and sow thistle are two weeds of considerable importance. They are both perennials and neither starts growth very early in the season. In control of these weeds a combination of cultivation and short season competitive crop may be used. If Olli barley or greenfeed is seeded early and fairly heavily the crop can be cut before the thistles blow.

The thistle is the weakest in the flowering stage. Thorough cultivation following the binder and continuing until freeze-up will do much to eradicate these weeds. To make a thorough kill it may be necessary to use this method for two consecutive years.

PARACHUTES

WHAT IS WANTED

You can remedy this critical paper shortage by saving every scrap of Waste Paper, namely: wrapping paper—store bags—cardboard — cartons — corrugated board—old magazines and books—envelopes and letters — newspapers. These represent the raw material for making vitally needed Paper containers.

HOW TO DO IT

Tie securely in separate bundles. (The little time you take will save thousands of man hours.) Then dispose of it through your local voluntary Salvage Committee or other War Voluntary Organization, or sell it through any known trade channels, your pedlar, dealers or others. The important thing is your Waste Paper moving to the mills.

PRE-WAR PRICES

The old family budget is acting up quite a bit these days, and no wonder. Nearly everything you buy has hit the ceiling. But there is one thing you can still obtain at the old pre-war price—electricity. And you still get the same dependable pre-war service.

Like your own living costs our operating costs have increased tremendously, too. Materials and machinery are harder to get and cost more. Payrolls and taxes, and all the expenses of making electrical service available at your touch of a switch cost more today.

It's the careful planning of past years—the policy of building for the future, for emergency conditions—plus efficient business management that enables us to continue the same high quality of electric service at pre-war rates.

THE CALF SHOW—

THE SHOWING AND SALE of calves by the Beaver Lake Calf Club held at Tofield on Wednesday afternoon, was one of the best events ever held here. While not either as large, exciting or crowded, as many other public events that have been previously held, potentially it was far more important.

To maintain a market in a competitive world, quality must be the dominant factor in any product and the quality of Canadian beef is no exception to the rule. Therefore it was distinctly encouraging and pleasing to see the high quality of calves shown and more especially the interest and pride of the youthful exhibitors. Animal husbandry is by its very nature both fascinating and complicated and is something that requires the constant attention and care of those engaged in it, and these youthful competitors having early in life learned of the need for constant care and knowledge in the handling of livestock, will carry this lesson on through life, no one knowing the good results that may come from it.

Of course events of this kind do not like Topsy, just grow, they have to be planned and organized, and much of the credit for the success of the event on Wednesday is due W. A. Moisey, district agriculturist, and Lars Olson of McKenzie district. Many others of course, gave valuable aid, but these two men in co-operation with those who exhibited, were the prime movers in the event.

The success of a calf show depends to no small extent on the results of the sale, and in this respect the Club is indebted to the T. Eaton Co. of Winnipeg and Canada Packers, who sent buyers from Edmonton. D. E. Ball, who it is interesting to note, started his auctioneering career at Tofield also made the journey from Edmonton and gave his valuable services free.

VALUABLE AID—

HOWEVER BADLY the Alberta Social Credit government may have fallen down as regards the paying of the $25.00 a month dividend, it is in some respects, paying dividends to those who need them worst. We refer firstly to the free maternity hospitalization plan and secondly to the free X-ray opportunity offered in respect to tuberculosis. Both pieces of legislation are steps in the right direction and when needed are of invaluable aid to those concerned. An article regarding free X-ray by Dr. Cutsungavich appears in this issue.

A SOLDIER'S WATCH—

THIS IS A LITTLE more on that serviceman who kept his watch on "our time," as he put it, so wherever he was he could follow the routine activities of his family home on the farm. The soldier explained that when his watch said five o'clock in the afternoon he knew Dad was on the way to the barn to "do the chores." Or, if the hands pointed to six o'clock, Mom was clanging the dinner bell for the men to come in for supper.

He didn't go into detail but one can assume that five o'clock by his watch means more than just ',chore time." It means foaming pails of milk, the warm smell of the barn; the stamping of hoofs, creaking stanchions, rattle of halters, swish of tails.

If it's six, there's Mom over the big stove, stirring-spoon in hand. Tea-kettle's a-singing. Men scuffing from the sink, groping with puckered faces for the roller towel on the buttery door. Mom with starchy apron ladling generous portions of food on crockery plates.

Then comes evening; eight o'clock, his watch says. Dad's in his sagging leather chair, head nodding over the morning—yes, the morning—paper. Mom is knitting and rocking in two-four time. Pal lies on the hearth dreaming doggy dreams.

Soldier, you've chosen a wise way of keeping home close to your heart. You know what you're fighting for. May your watch never run down! —Christian Science Monitor.

THE ONE THING NEEDFUL—

In a world so ingeniously organized that every last man, woman and child would be properly housed, clothed and fed, the problem still would be, What to do with life? . . .

For example, social workers have come to see that what the poor need more desperately than even material aid is a new grip on life, a new attitude toward the world. Something spiritual.

Physicians have long recognized that many of the deep-seated maladies of mankind are actually diseases of the ego rather than of the body . . .

Ministers of religion constantly remind their people that to be transformed in estate means first a transformation of mind and heart and motive . . .

The difference between a sick and a sound civilization is more often measured by the absence of these spiritual factors than it is by the absence of material factors . . .

It is for lack of vision that a people perishes, not for lack of material resources. —Evansville (Ind.) Courier..

NEW BACON DEAL WILL AID FARMERS

Ottawa,— A precedent which will mean much to Canadian farmers after the war was set when Canada negotiated a four-year bacon agreement with the United Kingdom. The contract calls for delivery of 2,045,000,000 pounds of bacon to the United Kingdom during the next four years.

The extended period of the pact should mean that, for some time after the war Canadian hog producers will have a much better market than before 1939 when the biggest export year was 190,000,000 pounds sold to Britain and during one year the United Kingdom's buying from Canada fell to 12,000,000 pounds. The average for the next four years will be 500,000,000 pounds.

The size of the contract and the increase of 75 cents per hundred pounds in price are both important. But the outstanding feature of the new agreement is that it is for four years and may run well into the early peace years. This is believed to be a pattern for future food contracts with Britain and possibly other nations, assuring that there will be no sudden slump in demand with the end of the war.

It is part of the general Government program to take steps now for post-war prosperity and will help the plan to keep a floor under farm prices, for which legislation is being introduced this session. Taken together with the demand of war-stricken nations after liberation, it appears that there will be a big demand for Canadian farm products for some years.

PRISONERS TO HELP

German prisoners of war, of whom there are around 20,000 in Alberta, will be employed on farms in southern Alberta during the current season. Hostels will be established at rural centres and the prisoners housed thereon, going to the farms in the morning and returning in the evening. Rates of pay have been set, which farmers will turn over to the Department of Labor. The prisoners will be credited with a flat wage of 50 cents per day by the department and will be permitted to spend 20 cents of this daily wage, and the remainder is to be deferred until their repatriation.

I had a nightmare...
THEN THANK GOODNESS — I WOKE UP!
INFLATION DISASTER

I dreamed that I paid $5.00 for a haircut and $50.00 for a pair of cardboard shoes. I dreamed that we had no wartime controls on prices, profits or wages, and that we hadn't had the sense to organize the distribution of supplies all the way down the line . . .

I dreamed that because everyone was making more money and spending it, prices were skyrocketing.

all the stores looked like "fire" sales . . . with people scrambling to buy before prices went still higher . . .

panicky people were buying things they didn't need, and hoarding everything they could get their hands on . . .

I dreamed that everybody had to fight to get more money . . . and that in this mad race, wages and salaries were falling behind.

I dreamed the hand of everyone was against his neighbour, with each of us blaming the other fellow for his troubles.

with everybody for himself . . . no matter what it cost in the long run . . . and no matter how it hurt the war effort.

to realize with relief that I live in a country where things are sane and stable . . . where the cost of living has been kept within bounds.

to realize that prices and wages—production costs and selling prices—are inseparably linked together.

to realize that without the safeguards that have headed off inflation, my nightmare might have become a reality!

to remind myself that the danger is still pressing and that we must continue to hold firm . . . and that means everybody must play fair and do his part by not trying to get some temporary, fancied advantage at the expense of his fellow-Canadians.

BAPTIST MISSION CENTRE CHURCH NEWS

SUNDAY JUNE 4th

We are happy at the growing interest in the study of the Scriptures by the people of our land. At the Tofield Mission Centre Bible Class we have studied from mimeographed notes, which have been given to each student, the following topics. The Student and his Bible, The Bible Classification of the Human Race; Sonship and Servitude, the Two Natures of the Believer; the Believer's Standing and State. Then in continuing our Morning Bible Class studies we chose to study throughout the coming months "God's Division of the Bible" following as a guide the large colored wall chart. This type of study will give us the elementary knowledge of Bible study and prepare the student for the deeper things of God, or first using the milk of the Word, then partaking of the strong meat. (1 Peter 2 2, Heb. 5 11-14).

Let us ever keep in mind, that new birth is an absolute essential before a person can understand the things of God. (1 Cor. 2 14'. (John 3. It is a profound and happy privilege to possess the "Assurance" (know for sure, without doubt that we are bought with a price, even the blood of Christ, and that presents us faultless before the God of Heaven! Greater significance attaches to the 1944 wheat harvest in North America than seemed likely eight or ten months ago. It is expected, says the Monthly Review of the Wheat Situation, that 1,750,000,000 bushels of Canadian and U.S. wheat will disappear during the present crop year, and that the combined carryover of the two countries will show a reduction of 540,000,000 bushels from the total a year earlier.

Service	8:30 p.m.

The Ministik United Church Young People's Society had a very successful bonfire and weiner roast on Monday evening, with 26 present. Held at Mr. and Mrs. Alex Kleinsteuber's, it was the second meeting of the season for the group. There was a lively game of softball until dark. The next meeting will be held at the Ministik Memorial Hall on Thursday, June 15th at 8.30 p.m. All young people are cordially invited.

Frank and Donald Grummett, Douglas George and Pete Baumgartner, all overseas, have sent back word to the cigarette committee that they have received their parcels, and wish to express their hearty thanks to all those in the community who contributed to make this comfort possible. The committee is under the capable charge of Mrs. William Whitford.

Miss Lorna Hennessy is visiting her sister Joan who is teaching in the Holden district. Miss Joan was a visitor at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. Hennessy.

Mr. Ernest Nix, student in charge on the Ministik field, returned from Edmonton Saturday after attending the meetings of the Alberta Conference of the United Church. He reported seeing while there several ministers who were formerly students on the Ministik field, Rev. George Spady now of Pouce Coupe, B.C., and Rev. Arthur Carr, now of Cayley, Alberta.

Mrs. C. B. Leach and family, Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Leach, and Mrs. D. R. Swabey wish to thank Mrs. Carr for her thoughtful gift of flowers sent to Mrs. Giles on Mothers' Day. The flowers came from her garden in Dewdney, B.C. Mrs. Carr is a regular subscriber to the Tofield Mercury.

Some of the Ministik people are looking for the brush cutter to arrive and start work for them clearing land.

I went into my garden, it was the month of June,
The air was sweet and fragrant with beautiful perfume.
The lilac trees were fading, the sweet rocket was in bloom
And as I went among my treasures I saw to my delight
That there would soon be blossoms on the rose trees
Red and white.
The little pansy faces were looking up to mine
And I thanked our heavenly Father for flowers
So divine.

—Mrs. A. J. Leach, RR2, Tofield

Local Red Cross Receives Well Deserved Praise

Mrs. M. C. Hammond,
Red Cross Branch,
Tofield, Alberta.

Dear Mrs. Hammond,

Enclosed please find official receipt 474, covering the splendid shipment from your Branch.

The boy's undervests are perfect. We are very pleased with them, also the pyjamas and bloomers are most welcome, and your heavy turtle-neck sweaters were a joy as the necks were loose enough to be comfortable. Re Khaki socks. We are not asked for any more of these at the present time, as all available wool is needed for sweaters and gloves, so we are off scarves and socks. Later on, if you should be making socks, please ask your knitters to make the foot a good 11", as that is the minimum length. We are asked to ship only socks 11" or longer. I know it is difficult to keep the sleeveless sweaters to the required length, but yarn is very scarce and a few extra inches makes quite a difference. They should be exactly 14" from under the arm to the bottom, 4" ribbing and 10" stocking stitch.

Everyone was delighted with your quilts. The one with the green blocks and binding is a beauty. It is a lovely pattern and so well quilted. I am sure they will be very proud of it in Britain, and we feel pleased to have such a nice quilt wearing our Edmonton District Red Cross tag. The quilting is beautifully done, and the quilt will be most durable.

A box went off to you today. Sorry I did not have any print to include but Woodwards hope to have some in shortly. Kind regards to your members.

Yours sincerely,
MRS. R. PROCTOR,
Convenor of War Work

Corp. G. Campion Killed In Action

MINISTIK LAKE

Once again a resident of Hastings Lake, Mr. Campion, is the recipient of a terse army communication: Regret to inform you that your son, Corporal George Campion, officially reported killed in action, May 23rd. Details will follow.

Needless to say to the many friends of this family, the news comes as a distinct shock and with it comes the realization of what war means, of its cost in that which really matters, the flower of our young manhood.

George was as well liked as he was known, active in sports and participating in the varied entertainments of the neighborhood. His parting words to me were, "We'll play hockey again when this is all over." It is sad indeed to realize that for George there will be no home coming. To Mr. Campion and family we offer the deep feeling and sympathy of the entire district.

Incidentally, this family has made a real contribution to the war effort, three brothers besides George going overseas.

TO A FALLEN FRIEND

At long last 'tis over. For him the din of battle,
The whine of shells, the angry drone of fighter planes
Is stilled forever. He hears not the call to arms,
The heavy tread of fighting men, he measures not the gains.

The day had come, his last. He could not know.
He carried on. It was as ever, a bitter struggle, grim,

A battle to the death. There was no quarter given
Nor asked. But falter? No! 'Twas not in him.

A soldier to the end, need more be said?
He gave his all in thrusting back the tide
That threatened. Mere words do not suffice, how empty—
That we—who owe so much—may in peace abide.

'Tis quiet there now, a knoll by the sea,
The distant bugle calls—you do not hear.
Rest on brave soldier, your memory with us remains
'Tis as when you left, your smile —with intent clear.

SPECIAL CHURCH SERVICE HELD

On Tuesday evening at the Cenotaph a special prayer service was held to pray for the welfare of the invading forces. The Rev'. D. K. Allan, N. L. Schmeltzer and P. O. Peterson all conducted prayers for the armed forces. Special hymns were sung by those attending.

THIS DUCK HAD HIGH AMBITION

Last week on the Henry McGinitie farm, John McGinitie and his grandson were out after magpie eggs. Seeing a nest high up a tree, the youngster climbed the tree to get the eggs, expecting to find a magpie nest. Instead a mallard duck forsaking the edge of slough or lake, had nested in the tree some 15 or 20 feet above the ground. This is quite unusual and is the first time that Mr. John McGinitie had seen such a thing in his many years of farm life.

Invasion of Europe Proceeding

CHRONOLOGY OF INVASION

11:37 p.m. Monday (C.D.T.) — German agency Transocean broadcasts that Allied invasion has begun.

12:00 midnight — German D.N.B. agency broadcasts Le Havre being bombarded violently and German naval craft fighting Allied landing craft off coast.

12:56 a.m.—Calais radio says: "This is D Day."

1:31 a.m.—Spokesman from Gen. Eisenhower in broadcast from London warns people of European invasion coast that "a new phase of the Allied air offensive has begun" and orders them to move 22 miles inland.

2:29 a.m. Berlin radio says 'First centre of gravity is Caen,' big city at base of Normandy Peninsula.

2:32 a.m. —Supreme Headquarters Allied Expeditionary Force, announces that Allied armies began landing on northern coast of France.

2:40 a.m.—SHAEF announces Gen. Sir Bernard L. Montgomery is in command of assault army comprising Britons, Americans and Canadians.

2:42 a.m. Berlin says heavy Allied warships are shelling Le Havre and parachute troops are floating down on Normandy.

2:50 a.m. — Supreme Headquarters says a number of feints preceded invasion.

3:07 a.m. — Germans say Allies were re-inforced at dawn at the mouth of the Seine near Le Havre.

3:17 a.m. — French patriots warned to evacuate areas 22 miles bordering coasts to escape aerial bombardment.

4:25 a.m. — Berlin reports strong air attacks on Dieppe; says cruiser and landing boat have been sunk off Cherbourg.

4:49 a.m. — Enemy says four British parachute divisions landed between Le Havre and Cherbourg.

5:24 a.m. — Prime Minister Churchill says 4,000 ships and several thousand lesser craft formed probably world's greatest invasion armada; "everything is proceeding to plan.

6:03 a.m.—German destroyers and E-boats rushing into operational area and "no doubt are being dealt with," headquarters says. H-Hour announced as between 6 and 8 a.m. British summer time 11 p.m. Monday and 1 a.m. (Monday) C.D.T.

6:09 a.m.—Allied landing forces establish beachheads and are advancing inland, aerial pictures show. R.A.F. bombers attacked Osnabruck, Germany, air ministry announces.

6:24 a.m.—Swedish reporters in Berlin report dozen landings with main attack toward Caen.

6:32 a.m. — Supreme headquarters announces beachhead secured and dug in.

7:01 a.m. — Germans announce Allied landings on Channel Islands of Guernsey and Jersey; say Allied tanks land at Arromanches, midway between Cherbourg and Le Havre. Allies incessantly employing assault boats off Oystreham.

7:10 a.m. —Paris radio says battle in Normandy "seems to be gaining depth."

7:34 a.m. —Berlin reports "fierce fighting going on everywhere" with Nazi counterthrusts in progress.

8:10 a.m.—Big channel guns on French coast fire on Dover.

8:13 a.m. — 11,000 Allied planes bomb and strafe miles of Normandy coast.

8:30 a.m. Marshall Petain broadcasts to Frenchmen to avoid reprisals.

The chronology of the mighty invasion against Nazi Germany by Canadian, American and British troops on the French Normandy coast tells in terse terms the order of the first phase of the unparalleled assault. Eleven thousand planes and 4,000 ships were employed in the initial landing attack.

Radio broadcasts have been continuous and already literally millions of words have been spoken in the attempt to picture the scene which of course no words can possibly describe.

The German radio has expressed strong naval forces had been sighted off the Dunkirk-Calais area, off Dover.

Gen. Eisenhower, supreme commander, was confident of success in the great land, sea and air blow. Allied high command disclosed that more than 1000 troop carrying air craft, including gliders, bore fighting specialists on invasion missions and said this phase was executed with "unexpected success." Naval casualties were described as light. Allied bull'earts slashed out costal landing strips. The United States 9th Air Force alone flew 4,000 sorties Tues. Clearing the way for ground troops 10,000 tons of explosives crashed down on German positions.

Kirke L. Simpson reported today that "coastal outposts of the boasted "impregnable" Atlantic wall were shattered on a wide front. Deep inland, air-borne troops were reported battling in streets of French cities and towns. Paris, Simpson says, is an Allied objective. The coast of Normandy obviously is not the short and direct road to Berlin, he comments, and Nazis may be right in thinking this is a covering operation, and an attack nearer the heart of Germany in prospect.

His Majesty the King, has broadcasted a message to the empire asking that everywhere intercession should be made for Divine mercy and help at this most critical time.

TOFIELD COMMUNITY LEAGUE

The Tofield Community League held a well attended supper meeting May 31st, in the Royal Alexandra Hotel. The League were hosts to the Armed forces, having present W. Worton and E. Regehr of the Army, B. Chandler of the Air Force and A. Patterson of the Navy. Abe Clutterham gave a short address based on advice to the boys when they get to France. Mr. Olson was wondering what company Mr. Clutterham kept in the last war? Mr. Moisey thanked the League for the part they took in sponsoring the Calf Show which proved a real success both for the Calf Club and Committee in charge of arrangements. Mr. L. Olson gave a short address on the Community welfare carried on by the League in this community, also his appreciation to those who gave their support to the Calf Show. Mr. Chandler distributed list forms to different ones in the country for the purpose of getting a list of those who will act as donors when the Red Cross Blood Donor clinic comes to Tofield. The members then adjourned to the Theatre where Mr. Alex Hensel gave a show of home movies covering pictures of the new bridge on the Alaskan Highway across the Peace River. Fosdick tells him [illegible]. Mark accepts [illegible] a party to help Teddy Banks win a $1,000 bet with Archie [illegible]. Mark is to get $100. Archie [illegible] him to his hostess Mrs. Lynn as Stewart Byram. Jealous of Mark's attentions to Pam [illegible], Roxie calls him an impostor and Mark returns the money but [illegible] the party. Burleson, the man who sent him to prison, is there but does not recognize Mark. Being [illegible] as a guest by Burleson [illegible] Mark but he resolves not to see Pam, Burleson's niece, until he has cleared his name and found the real murderer. After collecting his legacy from Fosdick, Mark makes plans to go west.

He was on his way to buy his ticket when he came suddenly upon her. It was fate, he thought, that she chanced to be out at the time. She was not angry, only surprised. She blushed furiously.

"Where have you been? We've wondered!" She held out her hand, smiling, her soft eyes kind. "You've treated us shabbily," she chided him lightly.

Mark did not go to buy his ticket. He walked at her side. The city street became an enchanted path. All his resolutions melted, his heart sang in his breast. He had seen joy flash in her face when she saw him. They walked a long way together. What was said did not matter; their eyes spoke. Then they came to a corner where there was a clock and she looked up at it, caught by the admonishing hands.

"Good gracious, it's quarter to two!" she gasped. "What am I thinking of? I was to meet Aunt Lynn at one-thirty for lunch! It's down at Monstrel's—she—" Pam laughed nervously. "She must be raving! I'll have to get there."

"No, you won't," said Mark, firmly. "You're going to lunch with me. I've always known it, only we've delayed [illegible] can't break that engagement with me!"

Her face was glowing above her furs, she shook her head, but her eyes laughed. "I can't!" she protested, "not today."

"Yes, today." He was determined. He was piloting her through a crowd and she could not escape easily. "There are never any tomorrows—it's today with me. What's this place? I'm a stranger. I don't know, but it looks good to me."

"It's a tearoom." Pam's eyes danced. "Can't you see? Look at the make-up. Quite a nice one. Aunt Lynn gets waffles here occasionally; that stamps it, you know. It's like an accolade on the shoulder for the waiter."

"Let's get waffles then!"

"Oh, but I must go! I must meet her." The girl paused and then she laughed, for he had led her inside the door and was selecting a table.

"[illegible]" he asked her, indicating a small table in an alcove.

Still protesting, Pam found herself seated and a bus-boy handing her a menu. There was a pleasant tinkle of ice and hushed voices somewhere.

"I don't know what to order," she said helplessly. "I've been rushed in a hotel!"

"What do the gods eat, usually?" he asked.

She laughed happily. "Aunt Lynn eats waffles!"

He made a grimace, seized the menu and ordered liberally.

"I couldn't eat so much in a year!" she declared. "Haven't you had any breakfast?"

"I don't know." His eyes caught hers and held them. "I've forgotten. I was [illegible] about that time—[illegible]!"

She laughed again easily. She was happy, she had been wondering for days why he had deserted; now she saw it did not matter; he had been running away from himself! The thought amused her. She took stealing glimpses of him when he talked with the waiter, and liked the strength of his bronzed profile, his ash-blond hair, the way his chin set itself hard. There was something enigmatical about him.

"Are you thinking me a heathen?" he asked bluntly.

She shook her head. "I'm not sure, you are—usually— aren't you?"

He leaned toward her and she saw the flame that leaped into his eyes. "I was going away today when I met you; going as far away as I could."

She was startled. "Were you?" Then she looked down at the table, trifling with her glass of water. "You're not going to stay in New York, then?"

"God knows!"

She lifted her eyes and met his. A soft flush crept up to her hair. She looked adorable and he groaned under his breath.

"I can't imagine that a man like you would care to stay here long," she said unexpectedly.

"What kind of a man do you think I am?" he demanded, "too uncivilized for urban life?"

She smiled, her eyes shining. "I shouldn't have said that; but perhaps I meant it! You know you're perfectly extraordinary — If you weren't, I should be down at Monstrel's now with Aunt Lynn."

"Would you rather?" he challenged her.

She shook her head. Their luncheon had been served and a little tea service was in front of her. She busied herself making tea and he watched her, a glow in his heart. It seemed a thousand years since a woman had made tea for him.

"Sugar?" she asked, poising the tongs.

He nodded; he could not speak. She had fine hands and slender wrists, he seemed suddenly to see her thus, making tea, or pouring coffee—a little table—the glow of a soft lamp, the leap of a fire on some home hearthstone. She was meant for that! And he—? He could never ask her to make such a heaven for him! He set his cup down, untasted.

"Isn't it right?" she asked anxiously.

He looked around and she was shocked at his haggard face.

"I wonder if you'd speak to me if I told you the truth?" he cried bitterly. "I wonder if any woman on earth knows the man she's talking with?"

"I know you've been tremendously unhappy."

"Good heavens; am I as cheap as that? Appealing to your sympathy—your pity?" he exclaimed.

"You know I didn't mean that!"

He was enraged at himself. Had he been playing on this young girl's sympathy? 'Pity's akin to love!' he thought furiously, and reddened to his hair.

"I've got to go West," he said bluntly, not looking at her; "I've got to take up a new life out there. I wanted to tell you about my coming to your uncle's house, it was—" he broke off for she interrupted him softly.

"Oh, Mr. Fosdick!" she said, looking around at the old man beside her chair.

Mark was taken aback. He abhorred himself for it, but Fosdick's gray face, his cold eyes, in that place seemed like the ghost in Hamlet, they reminded him. The lawyer had risen from a table in the farthest corner. It was evident that he had been watching them.

"I come here for tea; it's the only place where I can get the kind I like." Mark heard him explaining to Pam, as if he knew his presence in a tearoom was amazing. As he spoke he looked at Mark—looked through him and did not see him.

Pam thought they were not acquainted and Mark heard her presenting him as "Mr. Byram."

Fosdick stared hard at him, seeing him now. "Byram?" he repeated [illegible].

Mark, standing with his hand on the back of his chair, wanted to strike him for it. He knew that he had never before in his life been nearer murder than at that moment! Something hardened in him; he had been on the point of confession, of making a clean breast of it to Pam, but Fosdick was like a challenge. He stared back at him with fury in his look. There was a breathless kind of silence and Fosdick's slow contemptuous smile, hard as a blow. The young man's breath came, suddenly choking, his hands clenched at his sides, he was hardly aware of the girl, nor that Pam's eyes turned wonderingly from one to the other.

"I'm an old friend of Horace Byram of Utica." Mr Fosdick's dry voice had a hint of mockery in it. "I don't seem to remember you, sir, Mr. Byram."

Mark's white face defied him. "You know I'm not a Byram, Mr. Fosdick," he said in a low voice, hardly controlled; it shook a little with the passion that was choking him. Old Fosdick cackled; the sound was as unmirthful as the startled screech of a frightened hen. But he adventured no further; he saw the look in Mark's eyes; he turned his thin shoulders toward him and smiled crinklingly at Pam.

"How's your aunt, my dear?" he asked dryly, suggestively, his attitude — excluding Mark from the conversation — seemed to say: 'you're in bad company, my child; go home!'

Pam was flushed; her lip trembled a little but she forced a smile.

"I'm going to meet her now—I was on my way when—" she did not speak the name, "Byram" again, it seemed unlucky—"I've got to go now!" She turned to Mark. "Couldn't someone call me a taxi?" she asked hurriedly; "I'm conscience-stricken when I think of Aunt Lynn waiting!"

"I'll get a taxi for you myself," Mark said promptly; he was minded to leave her alone with his enemy; let Fosdick do his worst!

He left them standing by the table, the girl trying to make talk, plainly agitated; the old man's thin, black-clad back still squarely on the retreating offender.

"Hang him!" Mark thought violently; "it's like giving up—but he can have his chance. She's got to know; I've been a sneak!" His sheer rage at Fosdick did not blind him to his own iniquity.

Traffic was congested outside, and the doorman took quite a while to summon a taxi. It seemed interminable to Mark, wondering how bad Fosdick was making it.

"If I'd told myself!" he fumed. "Well, I deserve it—it was a black thing to do!"

What devil had possessed him to take up with Teddy Banks? He remembered the eighty cents, his tea and odious lumpy muffin, and smiled grimly. Such things led to crime. But without that adventure he would have missed—Pam! He choked back the flood of passionate delight that always swept him at the thought of her. He was a mad fool, and he knew it. In the wild medley of his thoughts the advent of the taxi brought reality.

"Here it is, sir, one of the new rate ones, too!"

Mark swung through the revolving doors of the vestibule and made his way toward the alcove. It seemed to him that the room had filled up amazingly and was full of eyes. He did not know that his white face drew them. Fosdick's back was still there, turned his way, and Pam was opposite, a little flushed, a little ill at ease, he could see that; she had worn a rose or two in her furs, she was dangling one now between her fingers, plucking at it nervously. He felt a sickening dread of the enlightened look she might give him, but, as he came up, she smiled, relief in her eyes.

"The taxi?" she asked quickly.

"It's waiting for you." Mark wanted to tap Fosdick on the shoulder and force him to turn, but the old lawyer managed, cleverly, to shake hands with Pam without apparently seeing him at all. He was treating the young man like an offensive cockroach, to be ignored when it could not be conveniently crushed.

The red was staining Mark's cheek as he walked down the room with Pam. They did not speak, tables were filled up, and, once or twice they had to pass single file between them, but he thought she knew; he could feel a change in her. Outside the door he stopped her. The street was crowded but they were alone together for all that.

"I've got something to say to you," he said hoarsely; "I suppose you know it?"

She looked up at that, her eyes gravely perplexed. She shook her head.

"Didn't Fosdick tell you?"

"No!"

GOLDEN GOOSE LIVES AGAIN IN WAR-TORN CHINA

The Golden Goose lives again and the woman who owns her spends most of the time just watching over her. So says a Canadian recently returned from war-torn China.

Before the war, China exported thousands of pounds of goose feathers, but since the Japanese invasion the little quacking "gold mines" have become almost a casualty of war and therefore doubly precious in China's patient eyes. If a woman is the proud owner of a laying goose, she's set for life, or so she thinks.

A smiling peasant woman in Chengtu, West China, refused $300,000 for a single goose, for she lays an egg a day. Mrs Wong, the owner, gets $10 a piece for hatching eggs and has so many orders ahead that she can't keep track of them any more.

Chinese women hatch these precious goose eggs by the warmth of their own bodies, keeping them in a little padded pocket between their breasts. This is a job for the older women of the clan, who sit or work quietly in the sun until the life in the egg becomes a newly-hatched maker of more goose feathers, and more money for the little ravaged farms that their peasant owners staunchly refuse to leave.

Weekly Editor Looks At Ottawa

Racial origins always make for an interesting study. Unlike the United States, Canada cannot yet be called a "melting pot". About one-half of the population of this Dominion (5,715,904) belong to the British Isles races; some 30 per cent (3,483,038) to the French race and 16 per cent to other European races, the 1941 census shows. Asiatics number less than one per cent. Increases in origins: the French by 18.9 per cent, British Isles, 6.2 per cent, other European races by 11 per cent. The number of Asiatics, it is shown, dropped by 12 per cent, mainly by a 25 per cent falling off in the number of Chinese. It is also interesting to note that those of European origin born in Canada in the past ten years increased by 63.5 per cent compared with 55.2 per cent in the ten years before. British Isles origin born in Canada went from 75.0 to 79.8 per cent.

The land containing Canadian war graves overseas is held in perpetuity for the Canadian people in the name of the Dominion Government, and bereaved parents will be interested to know that even during hostilities, the Imperial War Graves Commission sees to it that graves are properly marked and cared for. When war ends one of the first duties of the Commission will be the replacement of all temporary memorials with permanent headstones. Now all known graves will remain marked by specially designed wooden crosses, even with the Star of David in the case of Jewish graves. Ample space is to be provided on the permanent stone for a personal inscription and the engraving of a religious emblem, if the next of kin so desires. Relatives who wish to make enquiries about war graves should address them to Imperial War Graves Commission, Canadian Agency 312 Transportation Building, Ottawa.

Call 'em subsidies if you like, but the result is more money in circulation from the consumer, up and down. Did you know that in the last fiscal year $31,177,000 was paid on milk and milk products, canning crops and berries subsidies. The estimated requirements for the next fiscal year was stated in the House of Commons by Minister Gardiner as $17,000,000. The butterfat subsidy for 1944-45 is estimated at $28,200,000 and for fluid milk, $11,200,000.

By such things future international relations can be greatly furthered. Some forty Canadian cities and towns have adopted Cities in Soviet Russia. Our part of the friendship "pact" includes gathering of clothing, hospital equipment for the Canadian Aid to Russia Fund, exchanging of information between organization and individuals. For instance, the city of Fort William, Ontario, has prepared a pictorial folder with captions and texts in Russian, sent it to Poltawa, the Soviet city adopted.

The plan under the four-year bacon agreement with the United Kingdom means in essence that she will take from Canada as much in the next four years as in the past four years, and here are the figures of our shipments: 330,000,000 pounds in 1940; 440 million pounds in 1941; 600,000,000 in 1942 and the contract last year was 675,000,000 pounds.

There has been some easing of travel restriction to the U.S.A. Canadians will now be able to get up to $150 in United States funds for one trip in a 12-month period or up to $75 for each of two trips, but there must be at least six months interval between pleasure trips. A native-born Canuck can visit the U.S., by having his birth certificate and a photograph signed by a responsible official, and that is good up to 29 days.

Here's a break for the armed forces. Proceeding on annual embarkation or disembarkation leave, they don't have to pay any more than $15 for a round trip ticket, no matter where in Canada, the government assuming the difference. That should alleviate some grounds for previous gripe.

The five main weapons of wartime economic control are 1. Price Control. 2. Wages and salary control. 3. Heavy Taxation. 4. Increased savings through Victory Loan campaigns, etc. 5. Control over distribution of materials and supplies. Knock a hole in any one and the whole structure is weakened. Regardless of the little inequalities which crop up we cannot get away from the fact that there was a 14.6 per cent rise in cost of living before price control as compared with 3.1 per cent since.

Give To The Red Cross

THE PATIENT SENTINEL

Feeble yet, but through the early dawn,
The robin's note steals from the hidden bough;
No other sounds co-mingle o'er the lawn,
He kept the silent vigil until now.
The heavy lilac clusters droop in sleep,
No tinkling bell reveals where cattle rest,
No arms of toil bestir from slumber deep,
One herald wakes beside the shelter' nest.
Like some persistent hope that will not die,
Though storms may darken and the weary night
'Til golden streamers touch the eastern sky,
And God's rich day unfolds before the sight.

Blitz Cat Deserts Sea for Sleuth

"Blitzie" has had a remarkable career which commenced in her kittenish, Old Country days.

For some unknown reason the dock-bred cats of Liverpool used to run for the ships when bombs started falling. "Blitzie" [illegible] the mad, furry scramble one night, but didn't quite make it,—a flying piece of shrapnel struck her and next morning seamen found her lying on the wharf. They took her to the ship's doctor who extracted the shrapnel and stitched the wound. The crew adopted the cat and she accompanied them on a voyage to Canada where she promptly deserted. She later turned up in the C.P.R.'s maritime dock police office where Sergeant Bailey found her comfortably asleep in his chair.

Her sea-faring days over, "Blitzie" is now doing her share of police work for according to Sgt. Bailey, the cat guards his tobacco pouch and other belongings when he is out of the office and won't let anyone touch them. The two have become such fast friends that whenever the Sergeant travels between maritime ports and Montreal he takes "Blitzie" along in a specially-built crate.

Sgt. Bailey has been with the Canadian Pacific since 1911 when he commenced service as a constable, earning his promotion to sergeant in 1917.

THE ATTACK—

ALL THROUGH THE tortuous train of human knowledge there has been wars with nation rising against nation. Human knowledge, enlightenment, industrial progress, ease of communication and transport have only served to increase the intensity of conflict and the heroism of the individual combatants. When wars were fought with bow and arrow, battle axe and spear, cavalry and lance, excitement and courage went hand in hand. In the thick and heat of battle, men, in those days fought hand to hand with all the passions that close conflict arouses. The heroism required to jump alone from a high altitude plane into a terrifying void was unknown, as also was the courage required to fight at twelve miles distant, an enemy unseen, but withall, powerful and deadly.

This week marked a new phase in the gigantic conflict now raging. A conflict that for size, scope, and mechanical precision has never been equalled. The invasion of Europe, expected for months and awaited daily, almost hourly, began on a scale so vast as to almost exceed human understanding. At this moment all details of course are not available, but what is known is that hundreds of thousands of men, held in suspense through many months of waiting, have been given the signal to go into battle. There are a multitude of tasks for modern warriors, all of them calling for courage and many of them calling for courage free from passion or hate, but of a kind that exalts. In boundless skies and on trackless seas, on battlefields pitted with bomb and shell craters, in the heat of battle or during the lone watches of the night, the body, soul and spirit of these men will be tried as never before.

God, as an all embracing power for good; religion as applied to every known creed; Christianity as the light of the world; surely all these can have little to do with the carnage of war as such. It is only when we are convinced that our men are fighting in the cause of truth and justice that we dare ask the King of Kings for aid for our side. But we can ask and no doubt hundreds of thousands will fervently ask, that every mother's son sent from his home with the memory of high motives, will be cared for and by the will of Providence, brought safely back.

Into the greatest human conflict that ever was, myriads of men have entered. On to a continent many times drenched with the blood of past generations, hundreds of thousands of men are pouring; amid battles and still more battles we know there will be the casualty of human wreckage; but every one of us are fervently asking that the losses may be light and victory for the right be swift and sure. We are reminded of a sentence from "Our Mutual Friend" by Dickens, imperfectly quoted from memory.

"And this is the Eternal law. While the evil that men do often dies with them; good, never."

OUR FRIEND THE DANDELION—

YOU REALLY CAN'T overlook him, or, if you prefer, her, or if still unsatisfactory, we can say THEM. By the middle of May they begin to show their yellow heads and by June are a riot of color. Humble in origin, prolific by nature, individually unbeautiful but colorful in the mass, they are a May-June carpet for all Alberta. We may not want them but still they come; we may rebuff them, but their allegiance is superb; we may even try to destroy them, but like the cat dropped into the river, they are back on the doorstep the next morning.

They are no respecter of persons, rich and poor, high and low, cottage and mansion, are honored with their presence. Inelegant perhaps, but none the less sturdy, you may snub them, scuffle them, even tramp over them and again and again they greet you with their presence.

Somebody once said you could make wine with them, and isn't it supposed to be good to take a little wine "for the stomach's sake?" Well at least we tried, but any stomach that could take our product needed to have been made of cast iron and then lacquered to prevent corrosion. We relied on our nose and it proved a good sentinel. Then it was said their roots would make a good coffee substitute, we didn't try. Being of such a bland and friendly expression and also so numerous some use should be made of them, so it was rubber by a scientific process. Not much success, still a shortage of rubber and an overabundance of our friends. Some day perhaps their real worth will be appreciated, some day the humble, almost reproachful look will become arrogant and supercillious, some day our friends may be courted instead of flouted, some day the yellow blossoms may be picked before they ripen. Then our friend the dandelion will have come into its own.

FROZEN GOODS

Some Boston men bought a spring supplying a Canadian table-water, but found themselves in a quandary when a tariff of twenty-five cents a gallon was imposed on the importation of the water into the United States. They wrote a New York lawyer and asked him if he could suggest a means whereby they could avoid the levy.

He replied:

"Freeze the water. Import it in cakes, and bottle it on this side of the border. There is no duty on ice."

The plan worked. —Wall Street Journal.

European Food Outlook

During the first four years of the war the people of continental Europe fared rather well with regard to food consumption, this being maintained between 85 and 90 per cent of pre war levels. In fact most of the farm population and the preferred worker groups obtained about the same amount of food as they had before the war. However, the 1944-45 food outlook in Europe is by no means favorable to the enemy, according to the United States Department of Agriculture. The cumulative effect over the war years of shortages in agricultural man power, fertilizers, draft power, farm equipment, and machinery does not augur well for crop production this year. In addition, the impact of military operations on storage and transportation activities in general may have a poor effect on food supplies in 1944-45.

Up to this time the German people themselves have continued to fare much better with respect to foodstuffs than in World War I, because of expanded output at home supplemented by takings from other areas and the efficiency of the German food distribution system. The year 1944, however, may mark a decline in the German food supply. Mass bombings of transportation and storage facilities are interfering with distribution and are necessitating collective feeding and the relaxation of rationing regulations.

In Austria and Czechoslovakia the food situation remains passable although the standards are somewhat lower than in Germany proper. Food conditions in Poland are much worse than in any other area except Greece. The level of food consumption in Belgium remains very low. In France rations are at a low level, but those who are able to buy on the black markets are better off than the rest of the people. In Denmark food is in fair abundance, the larger share of the crops being utilized for direct consumption instead of for animal feeding. In Norway the average consumption among the masses of the population is between two-thirds and three-quarters of the pre war level. In Finland and Sweden the food situation appears to be somewhat better than it was a year ago.

In Bulgaria, Hungary, Rumania, and Yugoslavia taken as a whole, the food situation is more favorable than it was a couple of years ago, due to the fact that there was a good crop of wheat and rye last year and the peasants continue to plant and harvest their fields about as usual. In Greece the situation is bad, particularly in the cities. In Spain the food situation continues to be difficult because of low levels of production. The food situation has deteriorated in Portugal, mainly because of short crops and recent hoardings. Although there is no serious deficit in the total food supply of Switzerland, consumption in the cities is considerably below pre war levels. —Wheat Pool Budget.

A FOUR CENT PER POUND BONUS ON CLEAN WOOL CLIPS

In the Provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan a bonus of 4c per pound will be paid during 1944 on all standard grades of Canadian unwashed fleece wool with the exception of reject or defective grades. These standard grades must be naturally clean and in good marketable condition or must have been properly prepared by the grower prior to delivery at the Registered warehouse. In the latter instance rejects should be packed and marked separately by the grower.

The bonus will not be paid on any clip received in generally poor condition at a Registered warehouse or if the clip requires special care or work in cleaning and preparation prior to marketing. Bonus will not be paid on fleeces tied with binder twine or other sisal twine, or on wool that has been washed.

There is no great problem confronting the grower in securing the bonus and the additional 30c to the fleece will more than pay for the small amount of care required. Many clips are naturally clean because of the conditions under which they have been produced. Such fleeces require no special care at shearing time other than careful tying with the flesh or shorn surface on the outside. It is pointed out, however, that no such leniency will be granted in the matter of reject content as was the case in 1943. Some growers who received the bonus last year may be disappointed this year if they do not give the slight necessary attention in preparation of the fleece.

Following are five simple rules, which if adopted, will result in a decidedly cleaner clip—a condition which we are going to require after the war if we are to compete with Australian and New Zealand wool.

1. Pull or cut off ALL dung locks or tags.
2. Do not roll any burry, chaffy, strawy, muddy or dirty bellies in with the fleece. Good clean bellies may be left on the fleece.
3. If entire fleece is heavily infested with burr, chaff or straw, remove the infested portion and pack separately. In some cases, light chaff can be shaken out.
4. Keep shearing floor clean at all times.
5. Keep fleece intact, tie with paper twine, the shorn surface showing up plainly on the outside of the package.

'Bugs' in the Grain Bins

Seven or eight years ago, a distinguished authority on insects stated that, in Western Canada, we need never worry about insect damage in our stored grain. Most authorities are occasionally wrong, and he was no exception.

It is not our purpose to spread false alarm, but merely to draw attention to the defensive measures at our disposal. In guarding against losses due to insects in farm stored grain, we have three powerful allies. They are: a cold climate, a dry climate and a very efficient Division of Entomology in the Dominion Department of Agriculture. Despite these advantages losses have been suffered and will continue unless the necessary precautions are observed.

The best prevention against loss is storing only dry grain, and keeping it dry by means of ventilated granaries which exclude rain and snow and which are constructed so as to provide an air space between the floor and the ground. As added insurance it is wise to [illegible] his grain during cold weather or move it and, if possible, clean it, during very cold [illegible].

If storing tough grain is unavoidable, it should be examined regularly and, at the first sign of heating or infestation by mites or insects, it should be run through a fanning mill, threshing machine or combine.

All [illegible] Elevator agents have copies of [illegible] Government [illegible] on the subject and, also, the "Seedtime and Harvest" leaflet which gives more detail than space allows here.

'HI YA, POP' MAKES ITS BOW IN ENGLAND

London, May 24— Hundreds of British youngsters from 5 to 16 who have returned after four years in the United States gave their parents somewhat of a shock today with their breezy manner and American talk.

"Hi ya, Pop," some of the children greeted their fathers.

Those who had been shy when they went away in 1940 to escape German bombers appeared to have gained confidence. They hailed everybody as "buddy."

"It will take the youngsters a year to readjust themselves," one of the mothers said.

A father said:-"My daughter Mary was four months old when she went away. Now she is four years old and a good Yankee. I have never heard anything like it before."

So far, more than 2,000 British mothers and their children have returned.

One newspaper headline read: "2,000 to re-learn 'English.'"

FOOD OUTLOOK IS SATISFACTORY

Ottawa, June 5—Food supply situation in Canada is satisfactory at present, according to K. W. Taylor, co-ordinator of foods, Wartime Prices and Trade Board. However, if every person in Canada saved as much as one ounce of food every day, this would amount to 125,000 tons a year.

As long as the war lasts overseas, shipments of food are not apt to diminish, and great quantities of food will likely be needed in Europe after the war is over.

"We look to housewives as custodians of the country's larders to help meet these demands both now and in the future. From this standpoint housekeeping is a world responsibility", Mr. Taylor states.

Health Insurance Plan Making Progress

Now that the conference of provincial ministers of health with Hon. Ian Mackenzie has largely cleared the path for health insurance throughout the Dominion, large scale preparations are in progress for the dominion-provincial conference to be held this summer or early fall.

The Dominion government is working out comprehensive plans for post war readjustment in Canada, designed to maintain rural and urban prosperity at present levels at least.

The federal program for social and economic measures is also well advanced. The floor under farm prices, family allowances, low interest rates, easier credit and other steps can and will be taken by the Dominion. But because of provincial authority under the British North America Act, other measures require agreement and action of the provinces.

It is hoped that the necessary understanding can be reached at the dominion - provincial conference which, observers here believe, will be one of the most important events of the year from the standpoint of assuring a high post-war standard of living in Canada.

Ground-work for provincial co-operation is being laid by keeping the provinces informed in advance and almost continuous consultation in various forms regarding the problems to be solved.

ANSWERS for Victory Gardeners

What About Worms?

Worms can be a real problem. There are many kinds and varieties of them but all worms are alike in one respect—they live only to eat and grow. As a result, worms take many times their weight in garden stuff. Even worse is the messy trail they leave behind with corn ears spoiled, cabbage heads damaged, and many products, unpalatable from their chewing. The worst damage from worms, however, comes from the destruction of plant foliage, thus slowing up growth and reducing the yield of the crop or even destroying it entirely. Any worm in your garden is an enemy—go after him.

Where Do Worms Come From?

When you see millers fluttering about the garden, you may think the sight beautiful, but watch out for worms a little later. The millers are there to lay eggs. Some [illegible] the intermediate forms are not true worms in the scientific sense [illegible] the damage is the same and [illegible] treatment is also the same. They must be sprayed or dusted with an effective insecticide.

How Can Cabbage Worms Be Killed With the Least Trouble?

The best way to protect the garden from cabbage worms is by spraying a stomach poison mixed with water on the growing plants. This leaves a coating of poison [illegible] the cabbage head that is sure [illegible] to the worms. The cheapest and most efficient material for such poisoning is common lead arsenate to be had at any store selling garden supplies. If you are spraying with Black Leaf 40 for aphids [illegible] cabbage, you will control the cabbage worm also.

What Are the Reddish Brown Fat Worms I Find on My Potato Plants?

These are the beginning stages of the potato bug or Colorado potato beetle. They are heavy eaters trying to grow into full grown potato beetles just as soon as they can. Lead arsenate sprayed on the leaves is sufficiently poisonous to destroy them within a very few minutes. Here again if you are spraying for potato aphid with Black Leaf 40 you will get very good control of the potato beetle at the same time for the contact spray is effective against them in the younger stages.

Are Sprays Dangerous to People?

There is no danger from insecticide poisoning if a few simple rules are followed. Products which have been sprayed with lead arsenate should not be eaten until the rains have had a chance to wash off the material. In case of a dry year when such washing action is slow, careful washing during preparation for the table is necessary. In other words, no one should eat lead arsenate and if it is not "weathered" off the garden vegetables or fruit then it should be washed off at the kitchen sink. Washing apples after they are picked is standard practice in some sections.

Black Leaf 40 is not a problem. It is a product which evaporates and within a day or two after it is applied no harm whatever can come from vegetables which have been sprayed by it. Many gardeners use Black Leaf 40 exclusively, as they approach the season when they expect to harvest the product of the garden.

LINDBROOK

Sgt. George A. Campion, M.M., has paid the supreme sacrifice in Italy on May 23rd. Sgt. Campion enlisted in February of 1940 in the Loyal Edmonton Regiment and went overseas in May of the same year. He fought in the Sicilian campaign and in Italy. He received the Military Medal on December 22, 1943, for bravery in the field at Ortona, Italy.

George [illegible] with his pal, Gordon Tough, who was killed in action on December 21, 1943. The sympathy of the [illegible] goes out to his father, A[illegible] Campion of Hastings Lake, three brothers, Pte. Lloyd, overseas, Gunner Adolph (Dutch) overseas, Gnr. Cutis, overseas (Italy) and three sisters, Mary, Edmonton; Alice, Victoria, B.C.; and Marcella at home.

Mrs. Born, we are pleased to hear is progressing favorably in the Misericordia hospital.

We were beginning to wonder until today where Alberta got its title "Sunny". The crop should be away to a splendid start now with ample moisture in the ground.

Marie Smith had a painful foot injury while practising the broad jump for the track meet.

The people in this district are lining up nicely behind the Health Unit in volunteering to go to Tofield for a free chest X ray when called upon to do so. Will everyone in the [illegible] School District who hasn't [illegible] viewed, please notify J. A. [illegible] of their intention to co-operate. Last week's Mercury explained the plan very clearly.

HASTINGS LAKE

Private George Weslake is reported wounded while serving in Italy, but until further word is forthcoming we are unable to say more. We can only hope that the injury is not serious.

Mr. Michael Hand peacefully passed away at a nursing home in Edmonton Saturday morning. The remains were brought back to Tofield [illegible] at St. Margaret's church, Hastings Lake on June 13. Father Schmeltzer conducted the service.

To those who knew Mr. Hand intimately, he was a gentleman in every sense of the word, well read for his age, generous of heart and fond of his stock to the extent of denying himself in providing for them. If there was any unique characteristic of Mr. Hand, it was apparent in the fact that his spirit failed to keep pace with his years. His plans for the immediate future never failed to occupy a prominent part in his mind to a degree that would do credit to a man many years his junior. A resident of the district for many years "the corner" will not be quite the same with his passing.

Floral tributes were received from: Mr. and Mrs. J. Swabey; A. Rogers; Geo. Lee; A. Romanishen; H. J. Williams; Mr. and Mrs. N. Ellis; Mr. and Mrs. J. Tough; Mrs. F. Shupe; J. McGinitie, Mr. and Mrs. Bracegirdle; Mr. and Mrs. Earl Wilson and family. Spiritual offering W. Bates and family.

Present among those who paid their last respects was Mr. F. Baker, M.L.A., who made the trip down from the city by train.

Two Day Session Of M.D. Of Beaver Council

ORDER TWO PATROL GRADERS AND ONE CATERPILLAR TRACTOR

Buying machinery in a big way was the feature of the two day session of M.D. of Beaver held on Friday and Saturday last.

On Friday an order was placed with the Adams Machinery Co. for a patrol grader and on Saturday an order was placed with the Union Tractor and Harvester Co. for a patrol grader and also a caterpillar tractor.

Friday's meeting opened at 10:00, there being present: Reeve Anderson; Councillors Giebelhaus, Logan, Lucas, Moen, Ovens, and Swabey.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and adopted.

The bank statement was received and filed.

Letter from Old Age Pension Board was read and full old age pension was recommended by Council for an applicant.

An offer of one dollar per acre for a quarter section of rough land was not accepted.

Mothers' Allowance matters were dealt with, an investigation requested in the case of one recipient and an increase recommended in the case of another.

Letters were read from the Hospital Advisory Board and also some of the hospitals regarding the payment of 25c per day by the M.D. with respect to maternity cases. The hospitals desired 25c per day or as an alternative, proposed $1.00 per day for other cases. It was pointed out that there are few non-payments as regards maternity cases and to allow only 25c per day on cases other than these would entail a considerable loss to the hospitals. On the motion of Councillor Ovens the matter was tabled until next meeting.

A number of hospital cases were checked.

Letter from Mr. Floyd Baker, M.L.A., re the late Mr. Hands. Mr. Baker's kindness and valued services in connection with Mr. Hands was favorably commented upon by Council. He had practically taken charge and rendered a detailed accounting.

Mr. Stine, who is in very poor health, so it was reported, could not manage on his allowance and on motion of Councillor Swabey this was increased $5.00 per month.

Letter from Hail Insurance Board regarding account of $1200.00. The Board offered to settle at one third reduction. It was pointed out in discussion that individuals were allowed a reduction of 25 per cent. No action was taken.

Letter from Alberta Industrial Accident Prevention Assn. After discussion, on motion of Councillor Giebelhaus this was tabled.

Adjournment for lunch.

M.D. of Wainwright wrote regarding a conference of M.D.'s to be held at Wainwright on July 20th, and suggesting that M.D. of Beaver send representatives. On the motion of Councillor Swabey it was decided that representatives of the M.D. of Beaver be present at this conference.

Letter from Holden Herald re postal privileges. On the motion of Reeve Anderson, Mrs. Foran was authorized to get the necessary signatures.

A communication was read concerning mineral rights in connection with property. On the motion of Councillor Ovens no action was taken.

Mr. Hamilton of Adams Machinery Company interviewed Council and spoke regarding motor patrol grader. He said that while there was a scarcity of this type of machine, he believed delivery could in time be made. He advised, if council desired to purchase a machine, that they place their order at once. Some discussion ensued regarding the advisability of an order for a patrol grader being given, most of the councillors believing that the district needed another motor patrol grader.

Moved by Councillor Swabey that we place an order for a 412 Patrol Grader to be paid for out of general funds and each division to be charged a rate per hour as used. Carried.

Mrs. Kjaring interviewed Council re seed grain account. On motion by Councillor Moen Council agreed to accept the original amount, less interest. Mrs. Kjaring agreed to this.

Mr. Michael Seminuik interviewed Council re S.E. 14-48-16. On motion of Councillor Logan the S.E. of 14-48-16 will be leased to Mr. Seminuik for two years. This year he is to summerfallow all cultivated land and pay one year's taxes. Next year to cultivate the crop land and give M.D. one-third of crop.

Some discussion ensued regarding making the whole M.D. a restricted area for the eradication of bovine tuberculosis. It was decided to table this matter for the present.

The Town of Tofield wrote asking for a cemetery grant. There are a large number of cemeteries in the M.D. and to give a grant to one would bring a flood of requests from the others. The request was not granted.

Mr. Raymond Benson wrote offering $400.00 for N.E. 24-49-14 W4. Council did not consider this sufficient but agreed to lease this quarter to Mr. Benson for one year for $25.00 and the current taxes.

Mr. M. Barrow desired to purchase a quarter section for his son who is in Italy at $1.00 per acre. This offer was not acceptable and as M. Klassen wanted the same quarter it was, on motion of Councillor Ovens, leased to Mr. Klassen. This is rough pasture land.

Mr. McLean of the Holden school Division interviewed Council regarding some school bus routes. During the past year or so 15 schools in the Bruce area have been closed and the pupils taken by bus to Bruce. This has effected considerable economy both in money and teachers. Mr. McLean's visit was to acquaint Council with the routes used and to ask consideration of Council as regards roads. Council willingly promised this.

Mr. Gray, cement culvert salesman, interviewed council and a few cement culverts were ordered. Mr. Gray said he would like to do business with Councillor Ovens as they were both getting along in years. Councillor Ovens agreed that Mr. Gray was, anyway.

Some applications for position of stenographer were read, but as it was possible there may be applications at the office of the Selective Service Board, the matter was left until the following day.

A request from a number of the residents of Haight for a well was considered and on the motion of Councillor Lucas the sum of $300.00 was allocated for this purpose.

M. E. Christensen complained re trespassing on road on S.E. 27-49-16 W4. This was left to Councillor concerned.

Mr. Jas. Fahy, Lavoy, wrote re pound fees. This was tabled.

Councillor Ovens announced that the assistant secretary, having recently been bereaved by the loss of his infant son, he would like to move that a vote of condolence be passed. A standing vote was given.

Councillor Giebelhaus announced that a good gravel pit had been discovered on the farm of Mrs. Fred Grinde near Holden. The price quoted for one acre was $500.00. If purchased the gravel would be used near the source of supply with a consequent saving in haulage. Considerable discussion ensued as to the advisability of purchasing this acre of land with the gravel pit, the price appearing quite high. The matter was left over until the following day.

On motion by Councillor Moen, Council adjourned until the following day at 10:00 a.m.

SATURDAY'S MEETING

Council again went into session on Saturday at 10:30 a.m. There were present: Reeve Anderson, Councillors Logan, Lucas, Ovens and Moen.

By motion of Councillor Logan the gravel pit discussion was tabled until Councillor Giebelhaus was present.

By motion of Councillor Ovens a number of pounds and pound-keepers will be appointed.

By motion of Councillor Logan the M.D. will take title to all parcels of land to which they have authority to do so.

The appointment of weed inspectors was considered and appointments will be made in divisions where men are available.

Discussion ensued as regards the amount of money allowed hamlets for public works. Previously the different municipal divisions were allocated a certain sum and the councillor in whose division a hamlet was located was allowed something extra for the hamlet.

Moved by Councillor Ovens that the same percentage of assessment be allowed hamlets as divisions and that the allotment be added to the divisions in which the hamlet is located. That the amount allotted for

CHAPTER VI

SYNOPSIS

Released from prison after serving fifteen years for a murder he didn't commit, Mark Grant goes to the office of a lawyer named Fosdick to collect a legacy left to him while he was in prison. When Fosdick tells him he will have to wait, Mark accepts an invitation to a party to help Teddy Banks win a bet with Archie Landon. Although Mark tells them his real name, Archie introduces him as "Stewart Byram." At the party Mark meets Burleson, the man who sent him to prison, and Burleson's niece, Pamela Rodney. [illegible] does not recognize him and Mark decides not to reveal his identity to Pam until he finds the real murderer. He is lunching with Pam when Fosdick joins them. When Pam introduces him as "Mr Byram" Fosdick pretends not to know him. Mark goes out to call a taxi for Pam and when he returns he is surprised to discover that Fosdick has not told Pam who he is.

They looked at each other. Bitterness and shame and blind rage at the old lawyer seemed suddenly swept clean away. Mark only knew that he loved Pam!

"Of course you saw that something was—wrong?"

She gave him a sweet, frank look, putting out her hand. "I thought he was—horrid!" she cried warmly.

He held her hand close a moment and kept it to help her in to the taxi. He could not tell her there—in the street!

She smiled at him from the cavernous depths of the checkered black and yellow monster. "You're coming to see me? Let me see—I'm home tomorrow afternoon, five o'clock."

He had no right to go there again, but he had a right to tell the truth in his own way! He merely said, in a strained voice: "Five tomorrow—it's not a function, is it?"

She smiled radiantly, leaning forward, her hand on the door, to answer

"Just you—no one else!"

Then she was borne away, and he knew that she had no faintest hint of the awful thing he had to tell her. Suddenly he wished Fosdick had done it.

Fosdick, making his way back to that hive where he had his office, growled to himself like an angry bear.

"I thought better of him than that!" he said to himself bitingly. "Assumed name—making love to a girl! Always thought him guilty, but he was a boy and the old man may have been provoking, was mighty provoking sometimes. Now he's a man—no excuse at all!" he pondered, taking a nickel from his pocket to open the turnstile of the subway. He shot it in viciously. "I ought to tell Burleson, she's his niece."

Later, struggling out of the jam at Wall Street, he added to this his only relenting comment. "She's pretty enough to make a fool of any boy!"

He suddenly decided to go down to the great Trust Company building where Burleson held sway. Fosdick had been doing a little business for him and Burleson had telephoned several times for him to come over and close it up. Fosdick recollected that he could go there now. He reached the magnate after waiting half an hour in a luxurious anteroom.

Burleson was affable; he wanted to see him, he said, about the Grant Barton estate. Fosdick almost laughed; he had come about Mark Grant. For fifteen years the executors had held the Barton money in trust; the only heir was in jail. Burleson, recalling some details about it now, looked across the table at his colleague.

"Isn't it near time for that boy to be out?" he asked suddenly.

Fosdick's dry grin conveyed nothing—it was too cat-like in its whiskered grayness.

"He's out."

Burleson was perceptibly startled. "Since when?"

"Four or five weeks, I think—maybe more." Fosdick drummed on the table with his fingers; he was considering whether he would tell Burleson all about it or not. "He came here to get his aunt's money; you remember she left him about twenty thousand—more or less."

Burleson shook his head; he had shifted his chair a little and lay back in it now, thinking.

"He hasn't thought of claiming Barton's money yet, has he?"

"He says he won't until he's cleared," Fosdick's smile widened.

"Cleared?" Burleson did not smile. "The deuce! Does he expect to clear himself after fifteen years?"

"He probably knows he can't be cleared at all," Fosdick replied affably, "and he's talking bluff!"

"But he hasn't tried to get that money," Burleson persisted.

"Oh, he will!" Fosdick retorted testily; "of course he will!"

There was a long pause and then Burleson said flatly: "I think he should have it."

Fosdick looked at him thoughtfully, something like a twinkle in his eye. "I didn't know you liked him. You testified against him, Burleson."

"That's neither here nor there," said the great man bluntly, "he was seventeen, wasn't he? What's he like now?"

Fosdick considered. "He's big, good looking; got a snap to him. You wouldn't know him. I advised him to go West."

Burleson nodded. It seemed to Fosdick that he had aged lately; he was less erect, less keen.

"The West is the best place for him; he can live it down out there. Fifteen years, isn't it? By Jove!" Burleson drew a long breath, "it's a slice out of any man's life!"

Burleson swung back in his chair, staring out of the window. "Look here," he said slowly, "if he needs a little help—you understand? A fresh start. I don't want my name used, but I'll give it to him."

Fosdick stared. Then he laughed dryly. "Would you like to see him at your house?" he asked maliciously; a perverse imp had, so far, kept him silent. It was amusing to imagine the great man's surprise.

"At my house?" Burleson frowned. "No! What do you mean by that?"

"You wouldn't know him if he came, that's all," Fosdick replied coolly, "especially if he changed his name."

Burleson nodded. "Is he considering that?"

"Decidedly," Fosdick laughed; "I think he's done it already."

"Well, I don't know as I'd blame him for that either!" He glanced out of the window again, absently. It was plain that his mind was preparing to exclude Fosdick. "When you get those shares come up and we'll talk it over. I may buy a few more," he said shortly, reverting back to his previous business.

Fosdick rose; he understood his dismissal. Suddenly he made up his mind not to tell Burleson about Mark yet. But he stopped at the door to send a shaft back.

"You'll have to get someone else to help you out with Grant—if you want to start him—I've always believed him guilty, you know."

Burleson frowned slightly. "That shouldn't keep you from being fair," he said brusquely; "it was unpremeditated; he's been punished."

Fosdick grinned; the two old men were fairly matched, but the lawyer was the keener of the two; he saw that Burleson was nettled.

"Any of your clerks can send out a check," he said, "or—shall I send Mark up to see you?"

"[illegible] you!" said Burleson, sharply, "you get out or I'll break your neck!"

Fosdick went, cackling. His mirth pricked the magnate like a pin. He knew that his offer to help the ex-convict was in the nature of a magnificent gesture. Fosdick laughed at him; he thought he was posing! Burleson rose from his seat and stared out of the window. It was beginning to spit snow. He summoned his secretary, gave a few sharp orders and left his office. When he reached the street he dismissed his car; he wanted to walk home. It had been a custom of his in bygone years. The whim took him again; his doctors had recently warned him that he was "sitting out his life." He began to walk steadily uptown and the dash of snow in the air invigorated him.

"It's rotten to be shut up in padded offices all the time!" he thought, and then, abruptly, recalling the old grayness of Fosdick, he thought of Mark. Seventeen when he was sent to prison!

Burleson tapped the pavement sharply with his walking-stick as he went along; he wanted to rap Fosdick's head for recalling the case too vividly. It was true that he had testified against the boy—a routine witness, no more, but the scenes in the courtroom came back to him. He shook the mood off; he was not well, he knew it; he tried to fasten his mind on that deal he meant to make; it ought to net about four millions [illegible]

The crowds were thinning a little now, as he made his way uptown, but still they hemmed him in and he felt that singular loneliness which assails the wayfarer in a city throng. He was an old man, and his wife and his children were long since dead; it seemed to him, sometimes, that a singular ill luck in that respect, had pursued him. He had lost three sons. He had no heir; he had made up his mind to leave his estate, the major part of it, to Pam. She was not a blood relation, only his wife's niece, but the girl had crept into his heart and softened it; she was the only one for whom he felt real tenderness; the only one for whom he would have made a sacrifice.

He was progressing steadily, his grim face, set in its stern lines, his thin shoulders stooping under his heavy, fur-lined coat—a rich old man without health, without a family! The irony of it, of his accumulated wealth and his childlessness, often assailed him.

Someone brushed against him in the crowd, laughed saucily and caught his sleeve. It was Pam herself.

"I've been chasing you half a block, Uncle Herbert!" she panted.

His face softened; he was often amazed at his own weakness for this girl; he drew her hand through his arm.

"You ought to go home, miss; it's going to snow hard!" His tone to her was always kind, different; she knew it—a sour, hot tempered old man, too!

She laughed. "I love snow! I've been out with Aunt Lynn—you know what that means!"

"A socially conducted journey, eh?" he smiled grimly. "You're a little rebel, Pam."

"Uncle Herbert, I wish you'd tell Aunt Lynn that I'm old enough to go where I please, and—and Archie Landon hasn't any business to dictate about my friends!"

"So Landon meddles, does he? I thought the boy had more sense."

"He hasn't any! In the first place," he brought a friend of his to the house. Then he talks to Aunt Lynn because I lunched with his guest today—if you please!"

"I see! You've been lunching out with a man and got into trouble with your aunt. That's it, isn't it?"

"I've got a right to lunch with anyone, haven't I?" Pam tossed her head, then she laughed. "You see, the trouble is I can't be sly—someone always sees me! Archie Landon saw me today; so did that hateful old Fosdick of yours!"

Burleson looked down at the charming, flushed face critically. "Fosdick didn't talk, young lady; he's just been to my office. Old men are wiser than young ones, after all!"

"I wouldn't care a pin for Landon" said Pam hotly, "only it's mean—he brought the man himself."

"Who's the man?"

Pam blushed furiously; for the twentieth part of a second she hesitated; she had a terrible remembrance of Fosdick's "Byram," and Mark's reply. But she had no hint of its real significance.

"It's Stewart Byram. Don't you remember him at dinner that time, Uncle Herbert? The tall fellow with ... with the different look?"

"I seem to remember quite a number of tall fellows with different looks," Burleson replied, musing.

Pam laughed uneasily. "Oh, you noticed him! I saw that myself. He's—he's not like anybody else."

Burleson glanced down at her quickly and caught only the sweep of her thick lashes on a red cheek.

"Come to think of it, I do remember the man you mean," he admitted slowly; it occurred to him that it was the one whose face recalled something forgotten. It had been vaguely familiar. "What sort is he, Pam?"

CANADA SHARES WITH PRISONERS

With the ten millionth Red Cross Prisoner of War parcel going out from the Toronto packing centre this week, Canada listed vast quantities of food supplies sent to her sons now prisoners of war. From only one, of five such centres went 10 million pounds of butter, 10 million pounds of jam, five million pounds of canned salmon, five million pounds of sugar, thousands of pounds of tea and coffee, plus chocolate bars, packages of raisins, tinned meat, packages of biscuits and soap in the millions.

This, say Prices Board officials, is one answer to the queries about controlled distribution, and rationing of food at home.

MUNICIPAL ROAD BUILDING—

EARTH ROADS WILL always remain a problem to municipal administrators. Modern motor traffic combined with the elements, continue to undo the work which the builders and graders have done. Yet earth roads in the rural sections of Alberta are the only roads there are and generally speaking when once constructed, need to be systematically maintained if the original investment is to be protected and the roads kept in anything like good condition.

In common with all lines of human endeavor, rural road building and road building machinery have developed considerably for quite a number of years past. One rarely sees horses and scrapers, or even small horse drawn graders anymore, instead more elaborate, and correspondingly, more expensive machinery is now the vogue. To some extent even the elevating grader has been superceded by a machine known as the motor patrol grader. These machines vary greatly in size, construction and cost, and are themselves a product of development during recent years. For maintaining and even for simple road building they are the last word in road machinery.

When the M.D. of Beaver was formed from former municipal districts, there was, of course, considerable road machinery on hand. We do not know how much each former M.D. had but they all had some. But even when it was all assembled there was not enough to adequately serve all of the enlarged M.D. And it has been no secret for some time past that the ultimate aim of the council is to have a motor patrol grader for each division. This aim is laudable enough. Ratepayers clamor for good roads and good roads cannot be produced or maintained without money, men and machinery. But there are however, other things to consider.

Good municipal financing is done by what is known as the budget system. It is simplicity itself. At the beginning of the year a list of all probable expenses are listed. The total of these constitute the amount of money the ratepayers must pay and is the amount which determines the mill rate according to assessment. While the budget is not a law unto itself or so hard and fast that a slight over-expenditure or under-expenditure would do any harm, it is a financial guide that cannot be greatly exceeded without harmful results following. McCawber's advice to young Copperfield has never been excelled as applied to municipal government.

We are quite in sympathy with councillors who desire to provide ratepayers with good roads, it is a worthy enough ambition, but we do question the wisdom of spending so freely as to imperil the municipal financial structure. It might be wise when preparing future budgets to set aside a certain amount expressly for new machinery purchases.

A DRY YEAR—

THE FELLOW WHO first predicted that Alberta would experience a dry growing season must right now, be wondering what happened to his calculations. There has been many an Alberta June as wet as this one but for a summer freely predicted on all sides to have been a dry one, the rainfall this week must have been a little bit disconcerting. Up to Wednesday noon 2.65 inches had fallen at Tofield and it was still raining then. We are just about two and a half inches ahead of last year and over two inches ahead of the long time average to date. We sympathize with the promoters of the Ryley Sports and really wish that they could have had a fine day. But like the old time carnivals, rain on a sports day in June is a case of losing on the swings and making it up on the merry-go-round. It is disappointing to have to postpone the days fun, but it is good to have the promise of a good crop.

COMMUNICATION

To The Eastern Star,
Tofield, Alberta.
Dear Madam,

Hope this reaches you. I don't know whom I am writing to but whoever it is, I am sure you will understand.

At Christmas time I received a box from the I.O.D.E. and now this one from you. It's sure great to know that those at home, although they may be total strangers, think of the Canadians who aren't at home.

Sometimes life here is not all roses. Yet the war is on and I came over here of my own free will. The bright spots in life are mail and parcels from home.

I wish there was more I could do to thank you. Perhaps some day I can prove myself worthy of your deed of remembering me.

Yours,
Signr. Snell, Harold

RUINED LAND

W. D. Albright, superintendent of the Beaverlodge experimental station, a man experienced in agricultural matters, recently wrote: "H. H. Bennett, chief of the United States Conservation Service, confers on his country the honor of having ruined more land in less time than any other nation in history. Canada has followed her bad example only too well."

Dyson Carter, of Winnipeg, in referring to Canadian farm land recently said: "Tremendous areas of our country's topsoil have become exhausted and eroded to the point of uselessness and even greater spread of this destruction is imminent.

Just where has this ruination of farm lands occurred? That question might be reasonably asked of authorities on the subject. It is true that light sandy land in the semi-arid regions of the prairies taken up in the original homestead rush has been severely affected by wind erosion, but much of this land should never have been broken by the plow and substantial areas are being slowly restored to grass.

Researches made by W. S. Chepil of the Dominion Experimental Station, Swift Current, showed that most of the prairie dry land soils, excepting the aforementioned sandy soils, can produce just about as good a crop now as was produced after breaking, provided there is sufficient rainfall to produce a crop. It is an insufficiency of moisture in certain years and not the lack of fertility that has been the chief factor in lowering the yield of crops in dry regions.

Mr. Chepil said. "Studies show that our sub-soils are just as rich in phosphorus and potassium as the surface soil. Hence, any removal of topsoil will not eliminate the supply of these elements. Nitrogen is more or less concentrated near the surface but in no case has it been found to be lowered beyond the requirement of the crop. Except in the more humid section of the prairies there has been no indication that they were at any time suffering from the lack of nitrogen."

The principal menace to prairie farms is loss of silt and clay content through soil drifting. With the finer particles blowing away the remainder of the soil is principally sand, which has poor moisture retention qualities. —Wheat Pool Budget.

Les Oveleon met with a painful accident one day last week on a well derrick, necessitating 7 stitches on his forehead.

We were sorry to hear of the passing away of Mrs. E. Lawson sr. in Camrose Sunday, after several month's illness. Mrs. Lawson was a highly respected resident of our community for many years and took an interest in and was a willing worker in the church, secretary for the Ladies' Aid and the Red Cross of the first world war. In recent years ill health curtailed her activities, but she still kept in touch and was interested in any good cause. Our sympathy is extended to all the family.

Douglas Barnes, son of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Barnes, suffered a serious accident on Sunday which might have proved fatal. It seems he was adjusting something on the tractor when it started up, throwing him under the tractor and running over him. Fortunately it was a rubber-tired tractor and most of the weight went on his chest and arm. He was rushed to an Edmonton hospital by Mr. and Mrs. Barnes and Mr. Tollefson, where the accident occurred. While still in a serious condition, there are now hopes that he will recover.

Hastings Lake Service 3 p.m.
Ministik 8:30 p.m.

The services last Sunday were well attended at all three points, Looma Vista, St. Mark's Church, S. Cooking Lake and Ministik. In these days of trouble, strife and heart-searching, it is well that Christian people should gather together for worship and prayer. At all services Sunday, special prayers were offered for our brothers and sons overseas, just now passing through special peril on the mainland of Europe.

There will be a Hospital Meeting in the Ministik Hall on Monday, June 19th, commencing at 8 30 p.m.

The Looma Vista Young People's held their first meeting of the season, with eleven members and the leader, Mr. Ernest Nix, present. The new executive elected is: President, Miss Isabella Wilson; Vice-pres., Miss Molly Bachelder; Secretary-treasurer, Allan Foster; Program Conveners: George Grummett, Matthew Wilson, Mabel Wright.

After playing soft-ball until dark, the meeting came to order. The first night's program, which was brief, consisted of a business session and election of executive, a discussion of plans and programme for the season, the worship period and a sing-song. All young people in the Looma Vista district are invited to come and make this the best year yet. The next meeting will be Saturday, June 17th, at the school. Time, 8:30 p.m.

Miss Joan Hennessy was a week-end visitor at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. Hennessy of Ministik. Back at home again is her sister, Miss Lorna, who has been visiting at her sister's teacherage in the Holden district for the past two weeks.

Word has been received that Mr. Bruce George, formerly of Ministik, and now with the H.B. Co. at Fort Graham, N.W.T., has been promoted to manager of the post there. Congratulations, Bruce.

We of the R.A.P. put all our parcels together and believe it or not, it makes a lot of difference to what we have to eat, from day to day. At present in our R.A.P. I do most of the cooking, and what I mean to say we live fairly good, thanks to the parcels we get and the old pig or cow, that gets shell shocked and we have to put it out of its misery "?" Now I can't give you any war news, new rules just came in, but I will say, I've been caught by the camera quite a few times, and the news hawk had me up for an interview on the last do we were in. I don't like news, so I get away with as little to do with them as possible, but I introduced a new way of getting out the wounded, and now I see that the whole Div. is using it. A bren carrier as a front line casualty carrier, it's no fun, but by far the safest way in this kind of warfare. But enough of that. I have a little poem here, that one of the boys wrote, I'll try to give you a copy of it, it's called

THE OLD RED PATCH

(Which we wear on our shoulder)

It isn't much to look at
For it's unadorned and small
Still it's earned its place of honour
And will live in history's hall.
It used to be bright, red and clean;
'Mid England's rain and shine
When it first appeared in Blighty
In the days of thirty-nine.
Tho' its faded now and dirty,
'Neath the bright Italian sun
It's owners bear more honour
For the deeds that they have done.
For it flashed in Leonardo,
And in the dead of night
Gleamed redly in Ortona
By the gun bursts flickering light.
And in a hundred gun-posts,
The Huns' near shaven thatch
Prickles just a bit more keenly,
When they see the Old Red Patch.

TWO DAY SESSION OF M.D.

public works be 66 2-3 of assessment. —Carried.

Mr. W. Meisey, district agriculturist, interviewed council and spoke regarding restricted area in connection with bovine tuberculosis. This is rather an involved procedure, the Mercury fully describing it a few years ago when the former M.D. of Cornhill was interested.

Moved by Councillor Logan that the M.D. of Beaver be a Restricted T.B. Free Area. —Carried.

Mr. Meisey also suggested that an effort be made to collect arrears of taxes. He looked at this from the view point of tenure and if this problem was not attended to now while money was comparitively plentiful, it might become a more difficult problem later and even be the means of some people losing their farms.

Reeve Anderson agreed with Mr. Meisey's remarks and suggested a circular letter be enclosed with the tax notices.

Moved by Councillor Giebelhaus that we make a special effort to collect arrears of taxes. Carried.

Mr. McNichol interviewed council re the purchase of some culverts. A few needed culverts were ordered.

Mr. Grierson of the Union Tractor and Harvester Co. spoke at some length regarding the purchase of a motor road patrol. He stressed over and over again that machinery was hard to get and Council officially ordering today did not necessarily mean the Municipal District would have to accept delivery. If they did not want the road patrol when it was available, it was quite all right.

Mr. Grierson was asked as to the liklihood of getting a used caterpillar tractor. He replied he did not know of a suitable one available at present.

Councillor Moen was strongly opposed to buying a used caterpillar tractor. If Council purchased one, it should be a new one.

Mr. Grierson agreed with Councillor Moen and if Council decided to order a tractor today he would do his best to procure one for them. As with the patrol he stressed that it was not necessary to take delivery should Council change its mind.

Moved by Councillor Giebelhaus that we order a D6 Diesel Tractor. Carried.

Discussion then went back to the caterpillar motor grader, Councillor Ovens moving that Division One be allowed to buy a road patrol.

Reeve Anderson did not like the divisional aspect of the purchase. He said that they were one municipal body and should operate as such. If divisions continued to purchase important pieces of machinery, there would soon be seven municipal districts instead of one.

Councillor Ovens then moved that this M.D. order a caterpillar motor grader from the Union Tractor and Harvester Co., at $10,235.00. Carried.

Councillor Lucas expressed his disapproval of ordering so much expensive machinery in one year.

General accounts, hospital accounts, and pay sheets were checked and by motion ordered paid.

Councillor Giebelhaus gave a report on the proposed gravel pit deal. He said that a right of way would have to be surveyed in to it as title could not be obtained for land unless there was a right of way. The right of way in would have to be paid for by the parties selling the acre with gravel pit. After some discussion, Councillor Giebelhaus moved that the M.D. buy the acre of land and gravel pit at $500.00, this to include cost of surveying right of way. Divisions seven and two to pay for it. Carried.

Wage schedules for road work for men, horses and tractors were agreed upon.

Councillor Lucas gave a brief report re the Zook claim merely saying that the claim against the M.D. had been [illegible]

Council adjourned.

(Weather and roads permitting).

Activities in this district have been practically at a stand-still on account of the dampish weather. For the third successive time, the U.F.W.A. meeting has had to be postponed, while the meeting about the hospital has now been "washed out" twice. Not wishing to emulate the famous Dr. Foster who is reputed to have gone to Glo'ster, most folks in these parts have been staying close to home. More news next week, we hope.

Cpl. E. Stevens of Ministik has been awarded the British Empire Medal. Cpl. Stevens has been stationed at Claresholm, Alta., where he has been chef for about three years and where he won the award. He enlisted in the RCAF in February 1941. His wife and two daughters, Margaret Louise and Rosaline, reside at Ministik. Cpl. Stevens was recently home on leave and upon his return a party was held in his honor.

LINDBROOK

Mrs. T. Lawton is in the Lindbrook district visiting her brother and sister, Mr. Jim Bracegirdle and Mrs. Alice Evans.

Mr. and Mrs. B. E. Wilson returned on June 20th from an enjoyable holiday in British Columbia.

Mrs. W. Born is home after undergoing an appendix operation. We are pleased to hear she is progressing.

This district has been nearly swamped with all the rain we are having. About five inches of rain has fallen this week. The barometer says there may be more.

Archie Damburger and Gerald Tiedemann are home on leave. Good luck, boys.

Adolph (Dutch) Campion arrived home June 19th from overseas.

Mr. W. Lancaster will be leaving to go back to camp in the near future. Good luck.

Congratulations go to Mr. and Mrs. J. Warwa on the birth of a baby girl.

Woolake won the rural school championship at the track meet by winning three games of soft ball.

The L.C.C. plan on having a Picnic Sunday at Woolake's Beach on Hastings Lake.

CHAPTER VII

SYNOPSIS

Released from prison after serving fifteen years for a murder he didn't commit, Mark Grant goes to the office of a lawyer named Fosdick to collect a legacy left to him while he was in prison. When Fosdick tells him he will have to wait, Mark accepts an invitation to a party to help Teddy Banks win a bet with Archie Landon. Although Mark tells them his real name, Archie introduces him as "Stewart Byram." At the party Mark meets Burleson, the man who sent him to prison, and Burleson's niece, Pamela Rodney. Burleson does not recognize him, and Mark decides not to reveal his identity to Pam until he finds the real murderer. Fosdick learns of his deception, but keeps the secret for reasons of his own. Burleson is walking home from his office when he meets Pam. They are talking about a young man Pam likes. Burleson remembers the young man at the party who looked vaguely familiar to him. He asks, "What sort is he, Pam?"

Pam did not reply at once. they had come to a crossing and Burleson observed that she took advantage of it to hurry him across and point out the magnificence of a florist's display.

"Those are blue carnations. I don't like them, they're unnatural."

"I see that I'll have to observe this blue carnation young man, myself," Burleson retorted dryly.

She laughed delightedly. "I wish you would! You'll like him; he isn't like—"

"Archie Landon?"

She was indignant. "Archie's such a social idiot, he only dances and plays bridge and keeps tag on Aunt Lynn's social list!"

"Well, that's more than most of us can do!"

"You wouldn't want me to marry Archie Landon, would you?"

"No! But I don't believe you'd pay any attention to my 'wants'; you're too modern."

"I wonder why you're so nice with me when we're alone together, Uncle Herbert?" she leaned her head back to look up at him.

"You're really jolly, and you're terrible sometimes!"

"I lose my temper, Pamela; that's my trouble," he admitted; "you see, I've got the devil of a temper. Perhaps this new young man of yours will rouse it."

"You'll rouse mine if you call him 'my young man'!"

He laughed a little grimly. His mood with the girl was passing, that old gray look that the doctors were fighting settled down on his lean face. He had a big nose like a hawk's and his eyes were too near together, but saving the look of temper in the eyes themselves it was not a bad harsh face. They walked on for a while in silence, then Pam caught at his arm again, nestling her hand under his elbow. It had stopped raining and the rounded corner was full of moving wet tops of cars and buses. The big eye of the signal light winked yellow-white at them.

"Uncle Herbert, I want something of yours," said Pam coaxingly. "Will you give it to me? It's not much really."

He looked at her and his big mouth widened in a hard smile.

"Not to be caught, young woman. You'll not get John the Baptist's head on a charger—out of me. What is it?"

"Your little jade god—please, Uncle Herbert."

"No!"

She had coaxed for it before, but never before had she been refused with such violence. A red streak went up over his thin face; it showed vividly between his eyes like a scar. She was startled; for a moment she said nothing and then she ventured

"Why?"

"That's my business," he replied sharply, then seeing her face fall, he qualified it. "It's not transferable; a friend gave it to me long ago. Besides, it's unlucky; you needn't covet it!"

His sharpness alarmed her; she peeped at him as they parted to pass through a crowd at the corner. He did lose his temper! She lagged a little, he had to wait at the other side for her to come up, but she pretended she had been dodging motors. He looked at her shrewdly and knew he had frightened her.

"I'm sorry," he said, more considerately, "ask something else, Pam. You can't have that bit of jade! Before I die I'm going to smash it."

"I wish you'd tell me all about it, then!" she pleaded.

"I expect to tell the Angel Gabriel," he said, "but no one else."

She smiled, shaking her head at him, but she said no more about the jade god. Something intervened, too, to sweep it from her thoughts. They had come to another corner, waiting for the traffic. Suddenly she caught his arm.

"Look!" she said softly, "don't you see that tall man getting into the bus? See, he's had to wait for that old woman and the child to go first. He doesn't see us—that's Stewart Byram."

It was a moment before Burleson found the young man in the crowd at the curb. Then Mark stepped up and began to climb to the top of the bus. Seen in profile thus, his face showed clean-cut and pale. Burleson studied it, the bull's-eye in the tower flashed white again and they crossed over, the big bus swaying past on the other side.

"Did you see him?" Pam asked eagerly.

He nodded. "You say he's Landon's friend?"

"Archie brought him. You remember, don't you?"

Burleson assented, musing. "Yes, I noticed him. I wonder if Landon always knows his friends?" he added dryly.

He did not hear the girl catch her breath, she gave him a quick sidelong glance from under her dark lashes, and then looked away. She was angry—the blood rushed up to her hair.

"Do you mean you don't like his looks?" she asked after a moment.

He turned quickly; he had apparently forgotten her. "I meant nothing of the kind," he replied briefly, "he's extraordinarily like a man I knew once—in profile, that's all. But you say Landon brought him, and he's a Byram?"

"That's what he's called," she was ill at ease. Fosdick's horrid stare came back to her. "Whom does he look like, Uncle?"

They had come now to a corner where some taxis were signaling for fares. He called one and put her in it.

"You go home," he said authoritatively, "I'm going to stop at the club."

But she leaned out, calling to him. "Whom does he look like, Uncle Herbert? I've got to know!"

He seemed surprised at her persistence; he answered with a shrug, shutting the door on her.

"Look like? Oh, like a dead man!" and he gave his own address to the taxi-driver, lifting his hat to her punctiliously as she was driven away. The girl, peeping out of the back window at him, felt a queer tightening about her heart. "How ill he looks," she thought, "how broken and how old!"

She could not remember that she had ever seen him really happy!

Teddy Banks had been losing money since he won his wager and forced the indignant Landon to pay up. The young man had the habit of losing money, but he had inherited a good deal from those unimportant people whom he called the "Mudbanks." The only difficulty about it was the fact that it was tied up and old Fosdick, that dry-as-dust, crusty old lawfer had charge of it. Thus it happened that Teddy had to make occasional visits to the lawyers office and take—usually—a lecture before he got his money. Nevertheless he got the money, because under his grandfather's will, he had a right to a fairly large income, paid quarterly.

The day after Pam lunched with Mark happened to be quarter day and Teddy Banks called a taxi and drove down into the swarming street where Fosdick's hive rose imposingly. He found the old lawyer in his usual mood, he looked Teddy over with his lizard eye.

"You've been gambling again," he remarked dryly, "drinking too, I should imagine from your eyes. Of course you're after money."

Teddy nodded, not at all abashed, but seating himself on the edge of the table opposite and dangling his walking-stick between his knees.

"I'm broke," he admitted cheerfully; "stony broke!"

"Humph!" Fosdick began to turn over some papers. He had no valid excuse for holding up the legacy, but he wished he had. He despised the young man heartily; there was nothing in Teddy's make-up that appealed to him. "I suppose you're in debt, too, as usual?" he snapped.

"Not so deep," Teddy assured him affably; "I got five hundred out of Landon on a wager, got it cold!" and he laughed uproariously, suddenly recalling Landon's rage at subsequent events.

Fosdick swung his chair around and eyed him viciously. "You're a young reprobate," he observed dryly, "what was the wager about?" I didn't know Landon could afford to lose that much."

"Lose it?" Banks laughed again. "He did more than that—he burnt five hundred dollars up in rage—"

Fosdick, who valued money and had had to work for it, stared hard at young Banks. "He's drunk," he decided, frowning at him darkly.

But Teddy, enjoying his own joke at Landon's expense, explained. He explained in detail even to the fight in the smoking room and the holocaust of the money.

"Mrs. Lynn had frozen me out. She's down on me, and I vowed I'd get even. I have! She's invited the fellow in and had him to dinner. And now," he gurgled with mirth, "Landon's black with rage because he's making love to Pamela Rodney! Landon's dead set that way himself, and he can't do a thing—not a baily thing! Mrs. Lynn would fire him if she found out he'd brought a fellow in out of the street, you know; he might have been a whitewing, anything, on a wager!"

Fosdick, who had listened in sheer astonishment, found the key to Pam and Mark in the tearoom. He knew at once how the girl had been fooled. He reckoned to his scanty gray hair; he ought to have told Burleson yesterday!

"You deserve a thrashing, you young reprobate!" he said to Teddy Banks, with the candor of an old man who had been a friend of Teddy's grandfather and guardian of the Banks money for thirty odd years. "You and Landon both deserve to be sent up for disorderly conduct! You've done a pretty piece of work between you. You don't happen to know the man you introduced into Burleson's house, to his sister-in-law and his niece, do you? Of course not! You picked up a man in the street and Landon palmed him off on them as a friend of his! That's the idea—a friend of his and yours, too?"

Teddy laughed comfortably. "Not on your life! I don't come into it; Mrs. Lynn had cut me out. It's up to Landon."

"Up to Landon—Yes!" thundered the old lawyer, striking his fist on his desk, "but it's up to you, too, because you made the bet; you got Landon into it. He's a dumb fool, anyway! Now, I ask you, young man, who's this fellow? D'you know now?"

Teddy waved his walking-stick airily. "Search me!" he said.

Fosdick leaned over his desk and thrust his gray face forward until the light caught the glitter in his eyes. "I'll tell you what you did, you young idiot, you," he said sharply; "you and Landon picked up an ex-convict in the street and sent him into a friend's house, sent him to meet a pure young girl—an ex-convict, d'you hear?"

Teddy Banks slid down off the table and stood gaping in sheer amazement, his mouth open. "Oh, I say!" he gasped, "aren't you putting it on too thick? The fellow's a good looking chap, pretty decent sort—looks like a gentleman."

Fosdick uttered an inarticulate exclamation. "I know him very well" he said grimly, "I've known him for years. I knew him when he was sent up; he was seventeen years old—a good looking chap then. He's served his time and he's out. Just the same, he's an ex-convict and you an Landon sponsored him."

The venom in Fosdick's voice carried conviction. Banks stared at him, sobered; he even turned a little pale.

"Say!" he lowered his voice apprehensively; "what was he up for?"

"Murder!" Fosdick shot the word out with such violence that the young man jumped. "Murder—killed his old uncle for his money; rapped him over the head in his office and tried to clear himself afterwards and couldn't."

MORE FRUITS ARE UNDER CEILINGS

When housewives go to buy peaches, plums, pears, apricots and cherries imported from the United States this year, they will purchase under Wartime Prices and Trade Board price ceilings. Last year, until late in the season there was no ceiling price on these fruits.

Canadian stores will be allowed only a limited markup over the cost of bringing the fruit from the United States.

The order is designed to bring in more supplies for the early fruit market, and regulate prices for the consumer.

LONDON — The output of warships in Britain up to the end of January, 1944, was only very slightly less than that of the last war, and the ships are of much greater complexity today. There is a tremendous increase in detail of equipment.

CANADA'S GREATEST SHOW OPENS JULY 10th AT CALGARY

The year 1944 is proving the greatest in history at the Exhibition grounds in Calgary, for already records have toppled at four major events, the Spring Horse Sale, the Bull Show and Sale, the Horse Show and the Spring Race Meet; and now, plans are nearing completion for the greatest show of them all, the Calgary Exhibition and Stampede to be held July 10th to 15th. Designed to provide entertainment, relaxation and diversion for more than a quarter of a million visitors, all phases of this year's Stampede, the 50th Annual Exhibition, will equal the shows of former years, with several inovations to make the 1944 Stampede a show to be remembered.

First and foremost, the Calgary Stampede is a Livestock Show, where visitors from all parts of the world view in panorama the Greatness of the West. Last year, prizes were increased by 25 per cent in the Cattle, Horse, Sheep and Swine Sections, and again this year the increased prize awards are drawing entries from all four Western Provinces and Ontario, indicating competition among Canada's outstanding breeders of fine stock will be at a high level.

This year, the riders, ropers and decorators also receive an increase, almost three thousand dollars in prizes, more than former years. More than five hundred cowboys, including many of last year's North American champions will be after the Day and Final Money—but they'll find the going tough—for Officials say they have the finest bunch of broncs and steers ever gathered for the Stampede.

WHEAT ACREAGE PAYMENTS

During the three years, 1941, 1942, and 1943, farmers in the prairie provinces of Canada were paid cash bonuses for cutting their wheat acreage. Total payments in the three years for this purpose were 102 million dollars, according to a statement made by Hon. J. G. Gardiner, minister of agriculture.

The policy was inaugurated in 1941. The actual wheat acreage of 1940 was accepted as the basic figure and every farmer who cut his wheat acreage, sowing instead oats, barley, flax or grasses, was paid $2 an acre for so doing. In 1941 $4 an acre was paid for taking land out of wheat and summerfallowing same. In 1942 and 1943 this was reduced to $2. This plan ended last year.

Wheat acreage in the three prairie provinces for the past five years was: (000 omitted)

1939	25,813
1940	27,750
1941	21,881
1942	20,653
1943	16,729
1944 (estimated)	[illegible]

EGGS ARE "GOLD" TO BOYS IN ITALY

Pte. George Sprunt writing from Italy to his mother in Toronto says "You may be surprised to know that we pay for one egg 24 lires, and I must say that is quite dear for one egg." Twenty-four lires for one hen's egg is $1.44 Canadian money (based on the approximate value of the Italian lire just prior to outbreak of war in 1939). Then eggs sold in Italy for around half a lire each. Inflation in Italy has boosted the price of eggs to about $17.28 a dozen. That's why our boys in Italy think hens lay golden eggs.

The first authenticated record of 100 blood transfusions announced by the Red Cross Society in Britain is that of A. F. Leslie, Scoutmaster of the 10th Hackney Troop in London. Mr. Leslie has given a total of 87 pints and is credited with saving 41 lives. The oldest recipient was 69 and the youngest 13 months.

Why DO CANADIANS Like THE BANK OF MONTREAL?

It is not by chance that the Bank has a million satisfied depositors, besides thousands of other friends who use its services in various ways. There are substantial reasons, chief of which, we believe, are as follows:

First, Confidence. Canadians of every occupation—farmers, labourers, mechanics, office workers, home workers, business managers and clerks, corporation executives, professional men and women—believe in the Bank, because of its history and traditions, its strength and its known service to the nation.

Second, Experience. These Canadians know, by personal experience in dealings with the Bank, they can rely on it—come good times or bad, peace or war—for the kind of banking service they need.

Third, Modern Methods. Due to our modern methods, a spirit of helpfulness, and the practical efficiency of our staff, customers find it pleasant to transact business at the Bank, whether it be at the Head Office, one of our large city branches, or the smallest branch in the smallest town.

If you are not a customer of the Bank, you are invited to become one.

SPORTS DAYS—

EVERY WESTERN COMMUNITY is built up around a few dominant features. There is of course the school and the church, the country store, hotel, drug store, implement shop, blacksmith and many other features common to all small towns. To any small town resident there is "our" baseball team, "our" hockey team, "our" curling club. And then of course, depending entirely upon where one lives there is "our" sports day.

One midsummer day of the year we like to think of being especially connected with town and country communities, a day set apart for mutual pleasure of both town and country folk, a day perhaps magnified out of real proportion by the children, but nevertheless a day, the memory of which is impressed on childish minds for fifty years thereafter. While perhaps due to war conditions it is shorn of some of its former glory, it still is and still will be the first memory of crowds, pop, popcorn and peanuts, for many a farm child.

QUILT SQUARES AND CUSTARD PIES—

(By John Gould in the Christian Science Monitor)

LAST WEEK WE entertained the Shining Light Club. I say "we" with a purpose, although I avoided the house during the session and was careful not to lay myself open to the inadvertent fate of one husband who stuck around for ice cream and cake. This husband found himself listed in the weekly paper under the phrase, "Among the ladies present were . . ."

But I did entertain. Just as the ladies were gathering I discovered a whole family of rats having a picnic in the grain room, which is why my wife appeared bearing arms to greet her arriving guests. The first flurry was intensified as I proceeded to shoot all during the meeting. I didn't mind the later reprimand. I just explained that it isn't easy to shoot a gun quietly.

But once I heard the women singing, so it didn't bother them much. They're all farm women anyway, and they know how it is with rats in a grain room. For 25 years, now, they've been meeting at the houses in the neighborhood, and they've run into worse things than that.

Neighbourhood clubs don't usually amount to much around the countryside, but this one has ended its 25th year with as much vigor as was displayed at the opening meeting. It has a permanent organization, an annual financial overlay, and a limited membership of 20. Since the war attendance has had to drop, but eleven showed up here and that was considered excellent. In trying to find out what they do, I decided it was easier to find out what they don't do. In general, they're a group of women who take upon themselves an active interest in the goings-on of the community—and by community I mean our little hillside section of the larger town.

Grandfather thought they were wonderful — and they were. In his later days he lived alone, and they frequently supplied the woman's touch by contributing a cake or (preferably) a custard pie. The world's champion custard pie-maker (bar none) lives just up the road. Anyone who takes her a basket of eggs is amply rewarded, and her membership in the Shining Light Club is definitely an asset. If I were down and out, with no hope and no resources, and the Shining Light Club brought me a custard pie, all would be well. Think of all the heavy headwork that goes on over feeding starving nations, and think of the Shining Lighters and you arrive at a startling truth, viz.: a custard pie at the right time will do more good than a bag of potatoes or a ton of canned fish.

The ladies also take group notice of noteworthy events. Expectant mothers know what they do. Golden weddings naturally evoke a gift—but so do lesser occasions. Birthdays bring a card. Girls who are being graduated from high school get a pair of stockings; boys get a necktie. These ladies turn out quilts on a production basis that the WPB would like to know about, and every member stops tending babies, making butter, weeding gardens or baking bread once in a while to finish off her quota of "squares."

It isn't an expensive club. None of the gifts cost much, but of course doesn't need to. The women always vote a club dollar to Red Cross, another to the Salvation Army, and others to almost anything that appeals directly to the bigness of the combined heart. Among themselves the ladies swap gifts and cards all year 'round, under a "Peanut Pal" system. Each member's name is in a peanut shell, and they draw once a year. In this way my wife gives, and gets a Christmas present, as well as all sorts of cards and odd items during the year. She has only a guessing knowledge of her sending pal, but neither does her receiving pal know her identity. At Easter there always comes a card addressed with obvious mis-spellings and disguised handwriting, and at the end of the year she may learn that her pal has been a retired schoolteacher who takes great pride in her orthography.

The meetings are rotated on invitation, and once a year we have them here. The morning is passed with violent housecleaning, then a baking of little cakes and a making of big cakes, a mixing of salads and an opening of choice preserves. Farm women know how to cook, and a hostess to the Shining Light Club is definitely on the spot. I always take a sneak but they say the meeting opens with a prayer, the singing of a hymn, and other exercises stipulated in the by-laws.

Then they amass their collective ideas for club action, maybe put together a quilt, and when it comes time to eat you can hear them all over the farm. They do a lot of thoughtfully nice things, they have a good time doing them, and I dare say 25 years from now they'll still be going strong. I hope so, although women who don't belong to the Shining Lighters say all they do is gossip and waste time.

You won't get to Berlin in an Armchair!

If Canada and the United Nations had depended upon "Armchair Soldiers" to fight this war, the Nazis and Japs would have grabbed this country long ago.

There is no "Royal Road" to Berlin. It's fighting all the way and Canada's Army needs every man it can get. That's why, today, we should volunteer for overseas service. You'll need months of intensive training to make you fighting-fit.

Don't be a stay-at-home and let the other fellow do it. Get into a man's uniform with the G.S. badge of honour on your sleeve. If we're going to win this war, we'll have to do more than just read about it in the papers.

So, come on you fellows, the good old army has got to finish the job!

START SAVING YOUR WASTE PAPER

There is a definite need for waste paper. Those contributing a reasonable quantity are doing a valuable war service. Arrangements are being made to set aside a certain day for delivery in Tofield when the Boy Scouts will take paper brought in from the country.

Those contributing are asked to bundle newspapers and magazines in bundles of 25 to 50 pounds. Papers should be folded and flat. If householders will start to save now they should have some on hand by the time delivery day is announced.

"STAMP DAY" JUNE 30th

DO YOU KNOW that 25c buys 12 bullets for the Armed Services?

DO YOU KNOW that the daily consumption of ammunition of all kinds in this war has exceeded the highest weekly consumption in the last war?

DO YOU KNOW that the more we use of it and the heavier the fire power of our soldiers, sailors and airmen, the more lives we are saving for a triumphant return home?

DO YOU KNOW that the cost of rifle ammunition to the Canadian Government is one of the lowest of any of the Allied Nations?

If you DO KNOW all this, think how important your 25c War Savings Stamp purchases will be to yourself, to Canada and to the Armed Services on "Stamp Day" which is to be held on June 30th. Let's all get on the band wagon and do ourselves a favour by being "Bullet Buyers".

STRAWBERRY PRICES DROP

Edmonton — Seasonal reduction in the price ceiling on strawberries will make a difference to the consumer of around nine cents a quart and seven cents a pint, officials of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board point out. Based on transportation charges here, prices in Edmonton will be 35 cents a quart and 18 cents a pint. Price reductions will be relative to these charges on all Alberta markets.

Prior to placing price ceiling on the sale of strawberries, imported berries were retailing at around 50c a quart and 45 cents a pint. The Canadian ceiling effective June 5 made maximum prices 44 cents a quart and 25 cents a pint at Edmonton markets. The current price reduction is effective from June 17 to the end of the season.

Maximum prices for raspberries as established by the Prices Board in Edmonton are 45 cents a quart and 25 cents a pint, transportation costs will cause these prices to vary slightly at other retail centres throughout the province.

Local Boy Receives High Praise From Padre

Loyal Edmonton Regt.
Cdn. Army Overseas,
C.M.F. June 3rd, 1944.

Dear Mr. Campion,

It is with deep regret that I confirm the news of the death of Sgt. G. A. Campion (M16888) who was killed in action on May 23, 1944. It was during the attack on the Hitler Line. He went up with the leading company and they ran into a wall of fire from every kind of gun the Germans possessed. Most of the men were pinned down by the fire but he went on through the minefields and barbed wire right on up into the German lines. Someone saw him surrounded by Germans and being called upon to surrender to them but he had always said that he would never surrender to them and he kept his word. We found his body where he had been last seen the next day.

He was one of the bravest men the Edmonton regiment has had and we honor his memory. I knew him well and while he was a swashbuckling soldier in his attitude, he had a heart of gold. In Ortona I have seen him bring in little children and old women for attention as if they were his mother and his children. When his pal, Gordon Tough got killed, he broke down and cried about it. Then he got up and went out to fight harder than ever.

We brought him back and buried him in the Second Brigade Group Cemetery near Pontecorvo, Italy, in the presence of the General, the Brigadier and all the officers and men of the regiment. It was with full military honors. The following Sunday we had a unit Memorial Service at which his name was read from the Roll of Honor and special mention made of his name and record.

The officers and men join in sending their sincere sympathy. You will miss him terribly for I have no doubt that he was a good son and brother. He is well having died a soldier's death he is at rest, but you must carry on with only his memory. You can be proud of his record, it is a fine one and he died to bring the victory that we already have in part.

May God Bless and Comfort you.

Yours sincerely,
Edgar J. Bailey, H/Major.
Chaplain.

The JADE GOD

By Mary Imlay Taylor

SYNOPSIS

—V—

Released from prison after serving fifteen years for a murder he didn't commit, Mark Grant goes to the office of a lawyer named Fosdick to collect a legacy left to him while he was in prison. When Fosdick tells him he will have to wait, Mark accepts an invitation to a party to help Teddy Banks win a bet with Archie Landon. Although Mark tells them his real name, Archie introduces him as "Stewart Byram." At the party Mark meets Burleson, the man who sent him to prison, and Burleson's niece, Pamela Rodney. Burleson does not recognize him, and Mark decides not to reveal his identity to Pam until he finds the real murderer. Fosdick learns of his deception. Pam asks Burleson to give her his little jade god and is surprised when he angrily refuses and tells her he is going to smash it before he dies. Teddy Banks, hopelessly in debt, goes to Fosdick's office. Fosdick tells him that Mark was sent to prison for murdering his uncle.

Teddy Banks was a reckless youth, not given to much serious thought on matters of moral judgment, but the word murder came as a complete surprise. After all, he and Archie had taken an awful chance!

He looked glumly at Fosdick, hardly daring to believe what he had heard. He had known that Archie would be on the spot with Burleson and Mrs. Lynn for bringing an impostor into their home, but now Fosdick had just told him—incredible!—that this fellow, this Mark Grant, had murdered his uncle for money?

"Good Lord!" said Banks weakly. His knees felt shaky under him. The full significance of the thing that he and Landon had done began to dawn on him. He thought of Pam; Landon evidently believed that this—this murderer was making love to her! Even Banks had a perception of such things hidden somewhere in his vapid young personality. For the first time he was seized with qualms of conscience.

"Why didn't they hang him?" he cried, and only angry at the chance the convict had had to undo them all. It was a beastly shame not to have hung him and prevented it!

"Circumstantial evidence," Fosdick growled; "he got sixteen years. Good conduct let him out some nine months earlier. For all that, he's guilty."

Banks groaned "I say—I never thought of such a thing!" he admitted reluctantly, red with shame.

The lawyer nodded grimly. "Of course not! But you and Landon pick up a street tramp—a fellow who hadn't a penny of his own that night, I happen to know that much; and turn him loose in a friend's house—to make love to an innocent young girl. He's doing that; I've seen it. You—you young scamp you; I've a mind to punish you!" the old man stormed. "You deserve a drumhead courtmartial instead of the cheque I've got here for you," he added, holding out a slip of paper with the fierce reluctance of an old tiger snapping over a bone.

For the first time in his life, Banks pocketed the cheque without a grin of satisfaction. He seized it, picked up his hat and made for the door.

"See here," Fosdick called after him, "you tell Landon I want to see him—hear me?"

But Banks was already at the elevator. He was panting like a man who had been running. He reached the pavement in time to hail a taxi and fling an address at the driver. Once inside he relaxed enough to think. His amazement had, at first, dulled his other faculties. But now he realised that he was well out of it; he might be initially to blame, for he had made the wager, but he had been already turned down—frozen out; he was a scapegrace of sorts, and Mrs. Lynn could not visit her wrath upon him. Landon would get it—if she and Burleson found out! In the gloom of the taxi Teddy Banks grinned ruefully. He was not an ill-natured youth and he pitied Landon, for it was born in upon him that Landon would be betrayed; not that he meant to betray him, but there was Fosdick! As for Burleson—

In his excitement he paid the taxi-driver to make better speed by a side street and reached Landon's lodgings in the nick of time; he found him just leaving.

"Hello Ted," said he cooly, "I'm going out—got anything to show to keep me?"

"You bet your sweet life I have!" Banks seized him by the arm and drew him away from the door. "You come back to your rooms; I've got something that'll knock you cold!"

Landon, who had never forgiven him for the result of the wager, turned back reluctantly and unlocked his door. Once inside the room, Banks shut the door and leaned his back against it.

"See here, Archie," he said hoarsely, "that fellow—that wager fellow, I mean—he's an ex-convict; he's committed murder!"

Landon stood still. He had nothing to say, but he felt the blood pounding in his brain. He had hated Mark, but not for an instant had he imagined this!

Banks went on to elucidate his statement, to add a little color to it.

"Killed his old uncle fifteen years ago, that's why it's sort of forgotten—feeble old man, he explained breathlessly; "knocked him on the head with a brick, or something like that, a perfectly beastly murder!"

Landon folded his arms and straightened himself a little. Still he said nothing and his fixed stare disconcerted Banks.

"Look here, old chap," he said nervously, "it's a bally kettle of fish what are you going to do about it?"

"Do?" Landon's face reddened. "I'd like to hang you, for one thing," he replied bitterly. "It's that fool wager! As for this fellow—" his lips tightened—"I'll see to him!"

"D'you know Fosdick says he's making love to Pamela Rod—"

"Shut up!" Landon snapped. "You leave her out of it; you've done enough!"

"Oh, if you're going to foist all the blame on me!" Banks began angrily, but he got no further; Landon thrust him out into the hall, locked the door of his apartment and started downstairs on a run.

He was aware of Teddy's angry splutterings behind him, but he took no heed. He found the taxi waiting outside and commandeered it. He had found out, in the early stages of the affair, where Mark had his lodgings; he ordered the taxi there now, and threw himself back into the corner of it to think. The strongest feeling that possessed him at the moment was a kind of fierce exultation. He had not forgotten the smoking room and Mark's defiance and contempt. He had his weapon now and he meant to use it mercilessly. The manner of doing that most thoroughly and swiftly was the only thing that greatly concerned him; for a while he discounted the probable consequences to himself. He had seen Mark's first meeting with Pamela Rodney, and he had been utterly unprepared for the rush of his progress. Landon, a product of social conventions, a dandy of the ballroom, but fully determined to marry Pam, the heiress, had never dreamed of making love to her with eyes that had the kindling flash of Mark's. He could not. He had not the power or the will of a man who had suffered. Destiny had cast Mark into a fiery crucible, he had come out of it something of a pagan, but the pagan in him was clean and strong. He had never loved any woman before; in prison at seventeen he was heart whole, and the rush of passion smote him—as it might a pagan—mightily.

Such love burns like a flame. The flame had caught Pam, as fire touches the lovely wings of a butterfly and brings it down to earth. Landon, looking on, knowing how and why he had brought them together, raged at the thought. He was helpless, too. If he told the truth, Mrs. Lynn would certainly exclude Mark altogether, but she would just as certainly exclude the man who had made the wager; she would, indeed, exact the heaviest penalty from him, and Landon knew it. While Mark stayed away from the house he had breathed more freely; he had begun to believe that his threats had taken effect, or that Mark himself had reserve enough to forbear from further transgression. Then, by accident he had seen him emerge from the tearoom with Pam and had leaped to the conclusion that they had met often. The thought had maddened him; he was furiously jealous, and an ill-advised, ineffectual attempt to warn Mrs. Lynn had only made Pam equally angry. Then Landon, possessed, as he felt now by some demon of ill luck, had put his fate to the touch on the spot and asked the girl to marry him. He had been refused too absolutely to leave any hope at all. Pam was a modern; she took the matter calmly and gave him a flat answer.

"I don't like you well enough, Archie, to begin with," she had said, "and you're not the kind of man I'd marry anyway. You've never done anything in your life but play tennis and dance and make yourself agreeable. I've done about the same things. We'd bore each other to extinction. No, thank you!"

She had not said it sweetly either, because she was so angry that her cheeks were pink and her eyes flashed. Landon choked down his anger without accusing her of being in love with that "wager fellow," as Teddy Banks had called Mark, but, none the less he knew she was, and he vowed vengeance—not on her, but on the man. He had been in this state of mind when Teddy broke in on him with his shocking revelation. Landon felt like shouting, it was a fearful thing to introduce him, but he could lose no more by that than he had already. He had lost Pam! Very well, then; she would know before the sun set that she had to give up her convict!

Landon, sitting tight in the jumping taxi, laughed bitterly, with a kind of ghoulish joy. It was not until the vehicle stopped at the door of a dingy brown-stone front, that it occurred to him to be afraid of the consequences—physically. He remembered suddenly the terrible grip of Mark's hands in the smoking room; but not even that could deter him; he was at a white heat.

"The convict!" he thought, "the murderer—making love to her!"

Jealousy and something deeper, a kind of brute fury, carried him up the steps to the door. But he met only disappointment. The landlady herself answered the ring. Mr. Grant had gone—sent his luggage away, paid her and left an hour or more ago. Landon leaned against the door-post, white to the lips. It was no part of his plan to lose the triumph of his knowledge; to beat down the law-breaker!

The woman, seeing his face grow anxious.

"Did you want him for anything particular, sir?" she asked.

"I—I heard—just today, that he'd been in jail!"

Landon nodded. "Served a term for murder."

She uttered a frightened exclamation and then shook her head. "To think of it! And him such a nice young man, too!"

"You're sure he's gone?" Landon panted—his anger was not assuaged by this escape.

"He said so, sir; going west, he told me; didn't say where," she added, "but I think—Nebraska."

Landon glanced at his watch. The Chicago flyer had not left yet. Could he make it and get him at the station? He rushed the taxi there at full speed and he made it before train time. He stood a long time at the gates, waiting, searching the crowd with his eyes. But there was no sign of Mark. Landon's thirst for battle grew rather than diminished; he wanted to humiliate the man who had shaken him like a puppy; he wanted to be able to tell Pam who he was and what he—Landon—had said to him. It would end it all for him, but it was ended anyway! Pam had been scornful in her refusal. She had not meant to show it, but she had. Landon was still quivering at the thought of her young eyes looking at him, looking over him, looking away—with never once a flash of tenderness or yielding in them!

"Because of that convict!" he cursed him under his breath.

Then the gates clanged shut. He had seen the last traveller embark and Mark had not gone. He stood awhile staring at nothing. Where was he? Landon lifted his white face and stared at the station clock. It was nearly six o'clock. An instinct, an intuition, or just pure unadulterated jealousy, seized him; he went out and got another taxi. As he entered it he was startled by a sound like a pistol shot. His nerves jumped, but it was only a motor-car back-firing. He leaned forward and gave Burleson's address to the driver.

WHEAT SOWED UNDER FIRE

Coal mines, iron and steel works and chemical factories are the main "crops" of the Donbas, a typical Soviet industrial area. There are, however, hundreds of collective farms that provide the workers with food. When the Nazis retreated from this region they wrecked every farm as thoroughly as they destroyed industrial enterprise. Restoration of farming began almost before the invaders had gone. Farm workers, often under heavy enemy artillery and aerial bombardment and in spite of the shortage of tractors and horses, sowed 750,000 acres of wheat last spring. The hardships of the harvest campaign were even greater. The Germans did everything they could to hamper field work and to leave the Donbas without bread for the winter. The Luftwaffe peppered the fields with incendiaries and bombed the farmers while they worked, so that shelters had to be dug in the fields. But the crops were gathered, and for the first time in two years of German occupation the Donbas received its own bread from its own farmers. —The Miller, London.

CHILDREN HERE AND IN EUROPE

PARENTS OVER THERE WATCH YOUNGSTERS STARVE TO DEATH

(By EDNA JAQUES)

A mother in Canada knows that she can take her children to the beach on a summer day, where they can dig in the clean sand, wade in shallow water . . . picnic on wholesome food, bread, meat, eggs, oranges, milk, lemonade—and perhaps an ice cream cone to top off the lunch.

A mother in Europe does not ask for butter for her children—she only asks for bread.

A mother in Europe knows that scores of schools have been bombed while the children were in them, and little ones running along the sunlit streets have been machine-gunned to death.

A mother in Canada knows that her children will receive not only lessons in arithmetic, spelling, reading and social studies, but precious lessons in kindliness, honesty and good-will toward all.

A mother in Holland knows that her children are being taught hateful ideas by the Nazi teachers who have been sent there to train their minds in hate and murder, and the little Dutch mother wonders fearfully how much of this evil teaching she will be able to undo.

A mother in Canada knows that she can buy shoes for her children, warm clothing for winter, even toys at Christmastime. She knows they can have medical attention and dental care and good food and plenty of it.

A mother in Greece hides her face because she cannot bear to watch her child die of slow starvation, and prays daily for the deliverers to come before it's too late.

A mother in Canada knows that her boy has the free-born right to develop his talents and work out for himself a way of life according to his gifts and inclinations. He can build bridges or planes, paint, write music or get a little business of his own on a quiet street and live to a large extent as he chooses.

A mother in Germany knows that the State will direct her child's welfare as it sees fit. It can make him spy on his own parents, train him in cruelty and hate, teach him that virtue and honour are dead upon the earth, and turn a gentle little boy into a storm trooper with a lust for blood that nothing but blood will satisfy.

A mother in Canada can pray openly in her church, sing hymns, enjoy the blessing of worship as her heart directs.

A mother in Norway must teach her children religion secretly for fear of concentration camps and keep her peace for fear of reprisal for her family and friends.

A mother in Canada bears her children with pride and joy . . . but in conquered Europe a coming baby is regarded with dread and despair, knowing that there isn't enough food or clothing even for those they have now.

WORLD OF WHEAT

By H.G.L. Strange

WEEDS TAKE THREE BUSHELS TO THE ACRE

The National Research Council, with the aid of our prairie Universities, and the Dominion Experimental Farms, has recently finished a survey in which they attempted to find out the amount of the crop taken each year by weeds.

The results are startling. They calculate that weeds take about 20 per cent of all crops each year, which amounts to approximately 3 bushels of wheat to the acre, and in total money value comes to over $30,000,000.00 a year, which farmers lose because of the moisture and plant food stolen by weeds growing in the grain crops.

It is perhaps impossible to farm on our prairies under present conditions without any weeds. It does seem, however, as though the great losses taken by weeds could be cut down considerably. It must be remembered that this loss of 20 per cent represents NET PROFIT which the farmer has actually worked for, and earned, when he ploughs and cultivates his land, sows and harvests his crop. It is exactly as though after he had sold his grain, and put the money in the bank, some one had come along and stolen 20 per cent of his money.

Evidently it is worth while going to considerable trouble to kill weeds.

KEEP SOME OLD WHEAT

Farmers are advised by the provincial poultry commissioner to keep enough old wheat on hand so that they will have plenty of feed for poultry during the coming autumn. Feeding poultry newly threshed wheat causes enteritis. Wheat should be in the bin for at least thirty days before it is fed to poultry.

TREATMENT FOR FENCE POSTS

In a circular "The Bluestone Treatment for Poplar Posts, published by the Dominion Range Experimental Station, Manyberries, Alta., the following statements are made:

"Bluestoned poplar on this Station after being in the ground 10 to 12 years, are just as sound as the day they were put in. Untreated poplars have rotted off in from 2 to 4 years. Cases are known in this locality of ranch fences built with bluestoned poplars in 1903 having over 70 per cent of the original posts still in service in 1938."

Posts can be treated quickly and economically with bluestone. A saturated solution containing from two and a half to three pounds of bluestone per gallon of cold water is recommended. Because this solution corrodes metal, it must be prepared in a wooden container.

Only green unseasoned posts respond readily to bluestone treatment. The treatment consists of placing the bottom ends of posts in the solution to a depth of 18 to 36 inches. Due to loss of moisture at the top by transpiration the solution quickly permeates the cells throughout the length of the posts. As moisture is given off bluestone solution is taken up to replace it.

Before the posts are placed in the solution the portion which will be in the ground is peeled completely. So that the upward movement of the bluestone solution may be watched, it is wise to peel a strip a few inches wide along one side of each post. When the solution is seen to have reached the top the treatment may be considered completed.

In warm spring weather, treatment outdoors may be completed in 12 hours. Where a number of posts are to be treated water and bluestone must be added as required. At the Dominion Experimental Station, Scott, Sask., posts of an average top diameter of five and a half inches absorbed on the average 20 ounces of bluestone solution.

When treated posts are piled to season some are likely to split. This does not seem to decrease greatly the strength of the posts provided the solution penetrated beyond the sap wood to the pith or heartwood. This is especially necessary for the end of the post which goes into the ground.

The average durability of untreated fence posts of various tree species has been determined (Table 1). Untreated posts that have been well seasoned before being placed in the ground are believed to have greater durability than posts cut green and placed in the ground without seasoning.

Bluestone, when used as a saturated solution on green cut poplar posts would seem to increase greatly their durability. This treatment is simple and economical.

My favourite hero of the week: 20-year-old Able Seaman Albert Hanley of Saint John, N.B., of the RCNVR. He went down to the ocean bed in ice-cold water to recover a charge laden with high explosive and two armed depth-charge pistols which would have blown him to bits had he stepped on them with his 20-lb. divers' boots. They were accidentally dropped over the stern of a destroyer. He could see less than ten feet, but in fifteen minutes had finished the job with cool aplomb. The naval base breathed easier.

HELP WANTED

In its daily (Monday to Friday, 1:30 p.m.) broadcasts, and in the special series "Help Wanted" (Mondays, 9:45 p.m.) the CBC's Prairie Region Farm Broadcast Department is urging city men, students and others, to spend their vacations working on farms. The help is sorely needed. So are the crops. Above, a young urban worker is gathering sunshine vitamins in the hayfield, giving the farmer a welcome hand, and earning himself a little pocket money into the bargain.

THE IMPORTANCE OF GRASS

(Experimental Farms News)

With Canada's present export value of animals and animal products more than double the 1939 level, the need for grass was never more evident.

Grass pasture is the cheapest as well as the most nutritious feed for livestock that can be grown. The value of grass is due to the quality of the protein, same being highly digestible. It is also a good source of important vitamins, including vitamin "C", Provitamin "A" (carotene) Vitamin "E" and Vitamin "K", says J. A. Campbell, Dominion Experimental Station, Swift Current, Sask.

There are approximately 140 species of grass produced on the grazing lands of the Prairie Provinces. These species present a wide range of qualities as to productivity and palatability and many furnish highly nutritious forage for the production of high quality beef and other livestock products. However, in the principal grazing areas of the Prairie Provinces it has been found that approximately 90 per cent of the forage is produced by the following species: common speargrass, short-awned porcupine grass, bluejoint, Junegrass, blue gramagrass, Sandberg's bluegrass, rough fescue, bromegrass, Parry's oatgrass, and the grass-like thread-leaved sedge.

Besides adding to the national wealth, the grasses produced on these areas stabilize the soil. In areas where soil erosion has already taken place, the value of grass is again demonstrated by the efficiency and economy with which erosion may be brought under control by means of regrassing.

The importance of well managed grassland operated in connection with every farm in Western Canadian agriculture cannot be over-emphasized. By this means a degree of stability can be secured which could seldom be attained on a strictly grain farming basis.

THE C.C.F. WIN IN SASK.—

THE PHENOMENAL WIN by the C.C.F. party in the province of Saskatchewan recently, cannot be explained by any one sweeping statement. Such election landslides have occurred before and probably will again with varying reasons and consequences. Generally speaking a very long tenure of office by a political party is culminated with landslide election results, "time for a change" even though unspoken, is often expressed by the ballot.

Entirely apart, although perhaps to some degree responsible for the Saskatchewan result, there is however, a desire on the part of the electors of Canada for a more socialistic form of government in the future than it has had in the past. It is not so much that previous governments of all political hues, have failed in their duty to the electorate, as it is a growing realization on the part of the people that the old idea of a few rich men and many poor ones has to be replaced with more economic equality all round. This growing realization, which in turn is the natural outgrowth of agricultural, industrial and scientific progress, is being recognized by those governments that are still in power, both federal and provincial. Consequently, there has in the past year or so, even under the duress of war, been legislation passed and proposed, that in a socialistic sense, far exceeds anything previously attempted.

This legislation covers a wide and varied field and includes finance, health, and employment. The latest to be announced is a system of family allowances which are to start in July 1945. This legislation provides for a direct payment of money to the parents who support children and in effect will at least partly do away with the economic advantage a non-family couple enjoys over a couple with several children. Details of the plan appears in another column.

So to us, the significance of the Saskatchewan election is that the general public is aware, that what we now consider advanced legislation, is in order, and voted for the party that professedly sponsors it.

THE DOODLEBUG—

THE ADVENT OF THE pilotless plane into the war has, among other things, created many names for the new weapon. Some of them are descriptive, some picturesque, others both descriptive and picturesque. For the British the "Buzbomber" seems to have caught popular fancy while the "Doodlebug" is particularly American.

As to the effectiveness of the new weapon, Canadians still have to form their own conclusion. Between the extravagant claims of German propaganda and the stony silence of British officialdom, there is no doubt, some middle ground.

It does not seem possible that the Germans would go to so much trouble if they were not sure that they would at least be partly effective. The probable truth is that the pilotless plane is a terror instrument. Lacking, at least for the present, accurate control, it is liable to drop and explode anywhere within its range which at present is estimated to be between 100 and 150 miles. This means that without warning and without human risk to the Germans, death and destruction may come to civilian non-combatants, be they school children or be they old men and women. As a decisive factor in the war, the "doodlebug" does not seem to be much of a factor but rather just one other destructive nuisance to be combatted and defeated. Just how much actual terror this latest weapon creates is still a matter of conjecture. It certainly is nerve-wracking to know that something may drop from the skies bringing death and destruction any minute, yet if this war has proven anything it is that bombing alone has failed to be decisive, but rather an essential and valuable prelude to land attack and conquest.

TOOK THE TRICK

It was a country railway station, and the village was about a mile away.

A traveler who was making a call in the village asked if he might leave his box there while he was away. The porter said: "Certainly, sir. But you had better put a label on it."

The traveler said he was afraid he had not got one, but after searching for some time in his pockets he produced an old pack of playing cards, and said: "Here, stick this king of hearts on."

About an hour later he returned and met the porter, who was grinning and chuckling. The traveler asked him what was the joke, and the man replied:

"Why sir, just after you'd gone a gentleman came along and took an ace of hearts out of his pocket. He put it on top of your king and went off with your box." —Exchange.

CHANGE NEEDED

The six-year-old was seated at the breakfast table one morning, when, as usual, eggs were served. The little tot surveyed them for a moment and solemnly said: "I wish to goodness hens would lay something besides eggs." —Grit.

REQUEEN DURING THE FLOW

(Experimental Farms News)

There are two seasons of the year when heavy brood production is necessary in a colony of bees. (1) During late summer and early autumn so that the colony may reach maximum strength before winter sets in; and (2) Spring and early summer so that a large force of field bees is produced in time for the honey harvest, says C. B. Gooderham, Dominion Apiarist, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa.

Aside from a plentiful supply of food and careful handling of the colony, the queen is responsible for keeping up the strength of the colony, so she must be strong, vigorous and prolific. While it is true that many queens will retain these characteristics in their second year, it is also a fact that the danger of failure at a critical period is increased. Weak colonies in fall or spring are too often the result of unprolific queens. Dead or queenless colonies and drone producing queens in the spring indicate that a gamble has been taken with old and failing queens. Conditions for the requeening of the colonies are ideal during the main honey flow, especially towards the latter part of it when the bees are busy in the field and will accept new queens more readily than at any other time. July or early August is also a good time to requeen, because young, vigorous queens introduced then will be in their prime for building up the colony for winter and will still be vigorous and prolific for the build-up period of the following spring.

In large apiaries the requeening of all colonies may not be completed before the main honey flow ends, but in that case some of the requeening may be done at a later date provided the old queens are still producing large quantities of brood, but late requeening is accompanied with greater risk unless an artificial honey flow is created through feeding.

Having introduced good queens to all colonies, the beekeeper should remember that they cannot do their best without sufficient space to accommodate the brood she is capable of producing, nor without a sufficient supply of food to rear that brood to maturity. A good queen can produce a strong colony, but a poor one can never do so.

BIG RAINS

Average precipitation in Alberta during the period June 11th to June 16th totalled two inches, which means that 4,520,000 tons of water fell on the farm land of this province last week. Unfortunately the rain was rather unequally distributed, being heaviest in northern districts where moisture was already abundant and at some points precipitation reached from 6 to 7 inches, while the average for the week in the Edmonton district was 4.24 inches. This downpour caused rivers and creeks to rise to record levels inundating farm lands, and in some instances causing people to take to roof tops to escape the flood.

Central Alberta districts averaged better than 2 inches, the western areas receiving most of the moisture. In the south, which takes in all the area south of Calgary, rainfall averaged slightly more than one-half inch. Rains were light in a strip in the district which extended north-east from Calgary through to Munson. Southern Alberta crops just held condition during the week, the moisture being sufficient to prevent further deterioration. The south needs more rain. The Peace River district received rains averaging less than two-thirds of an inch.

Summing up: Northern Alberta is in excellent shape, central Alberta much improved on the west side and southern Alberta crops need more rain, particularly in the eastern sections. — Wheat Pool Budget.

BETTER OLD AGE PENSIONS

Restoration of larger permissable incomes for old age and blind pensioners is authorized by Orders-in-Council passed by the Alberta Government and signed by His Honor the Lieutenant Governor today.

Provision is also made whereby, in agreement with the Dominion Government, no claims for recovery of pensions from estates of pensioners will be made where the net value of the estate does not exceed $2,000. Previously, the amounts of pensions paid were recoverable from estates irrespective of value with 5 per cent compound interest.

Certain requirements pertaining to residence qualifications of old age pensioners have been relaxed. For instance, a resident must have resided in the province 20 years prior to applying for an old age pension but was permitted to live outside the province for not more than four years during that period. Previously, if the applicant lived, for example, four years and three months outside the province, he might have to live in that province an additional seven years to qualify for the pension. Now, under the new Order, such pensioner would be required to live only an additional three months within the province.

Furthermore, persons who now qualify for old age pensions but who are presently living in another province, do not have to return to the province in which they qualified in order to apply for the pension.

On September 1, 1943, the Dominion Government put into effect reductions in the amounts of incomes which would be permitted pensioners before deductions would be made from pensions.

By agreement with the Dominion Government, and as a result of the Orders-in-Council passed, today, these reductions are restored. Since that date, the permissable income of an old age pensioner had been $65 per year. This is now restored to $125.00.

The old age pension is $300 per year and the permissable earnings are now $125.00. In addition to this, the Alberta pensioner under the Alberta Supplementary Allowance Act, receives an additional $60 per year. This means that pensioners who, in future, qualify in Alberta may have an old age pension plus permissable income and plus the Alberta supplementary allowance amounting in all to a total of $485.

In cases of married couples where only one is eligible for a pension, a larger permissable income is allowed.

"ZOOT SUITS" OUT

Recent anti-zoot suit riots in Montreal, in which young men wearing such weird garments were chased by highly indignant sailors, calls attention to the fact that under the regulations of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board zoot suits have been "out" for a considerable time and their manufacture is a breach of the law.

Administrator's Order A-207 specifies that the coat of a man's suit can not exceed 29½ inches for a size 38, and shall have no "trimmings". No pair of trousers may have a width at the knee of more than 22½ inches for a size 32 waist, and they must not have pleats or other flights of sartorial fancy.

The zoot suiters wear a coat that comes to just two inches above the knee in front and slightly longer than that at the back. The trousers are at least 30 inches wide at the knee and sometimes reach almost to the armpits and the suit has belts and pleats and all sorts of "fixings."

The enforcement branch of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board at Montreal is taking action against the manufacture of these delirious dreams of draped "drips".

TOO MANY ACCIDENTS ON CANADIAN FARMS

The cold truth is that the ratio of preventable accidents in agriculture is higher than in any other industry. Many hundreds of farmers, members of their families and workers on farms are killed and many thousands injured every year in Canada as the result of accidents, most of which could have been prevented.

With the farm labour shortage just now so acute and when all out production of food is so essential to the war effort, the accident toll is particularly serious.

A survey has disclosed that machinery is the chief source of farm work accidents; that live stock runs a close second and that falls are in third place. The wise farmer is he who learning the causes of accidents on his farm takes steps to eliminate such causes and all possible hazards. For example, the fact that loose clothing causes one-third of all farm accidents involving machinery should make anyone avoid that particular hazard like the plague.

And the ever-present threat of fire which annually destroys millions of dollars worth of rural property, ought to be enough for a farmer to justify devoting at least a part of one morning per month to looking round the farm for fire hazards and accident hazards too.

Prevention of accidents means avoiding making an acute farm labour shortage more acute and also means an even bigger contribution to food production.

Safety First is a good slogan for any farm.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES START JULY, 1945

Details of the biggest social measure in Canada's history, family allowances based on the number of children under 16, have been presented to Parliament. Starting July 1, 1945, payment will be made in respect to 3,450,000 under 16 years of age. The outlay will be about $200,000,000 a year and every cent of this will add to the purchasing power of low-income groups enabling them to buy goods and produce made or produced in Canada.

Cheques will go to the parent who supports the children. In the case of men overseas the cheques will go to their wives at home. The scale is: $5 a month for a child under 6; $6 a month for a child between 6 and 10; $7 a month for a child between 10 and 13; and $8 a month for a child between 13 and 16. Where there is a large family the rates will be lower by $1 a month for the fifth child; by $2 a month for the 6th and 7th children and by $3 a month for the 8th and any additional children. Thus payments will run from $5 a month to $40 and are expected to average about $6.25 a month per child.

It is believed this is one of the largest postwar prosperity measures ever attempted. Not only will it enable low income families to improve their standard of living and clothe and feed their children better, but the added demand for articles and food will stimulate sales from farms and factories throughout the Dominion.

PIANO RECITAL A GREAT SUCCESS

On Tuesday evening in the United Church the pupils of Mrs. J. E. Stinson gave a piano recital which was much enjoyed by the large crowd attending. The program consisted of 31 different items. Variety to the program was given by the Junior Choir, who sang two numbers, Shirley Stinson and Keith Appleby who rendered violin solos; Margaret Dodds, Joyce Wiltson, Marie Spence and Betty Stinson, who sang a quartette; and Evelyn Wood, who gave a reading. Norma Scott gave a vocal solo. Those rendering piano solos and duets were: Doreen Lee and Noreen Carlisle, Rita Corbin, Beulah Peterson, Margaret Sware, Doris McGinitie, Doris Oslund, Alma Marie Rude, Audrey Ferguson, Katie Penner, Joan Webb, Doreen Brown, Ruth Torrie, Audrey Bradbury, Ellen Logstad, Margaret McAllister, Alice McGinitie, Lylla Bailey, Ila Moen, Cathie Currie, Dorothy Kallal, Doris Hendrickson, Betty Stinson.

RUBBER RINGS FOR HOME CANNING

Ever since the Japanese seized the principal source of natural rubber it has been an extremely scarce commodity. In order to provide sufficient for the fighting forces, use in civilian manufacture has been curtailed. The technical officers of the Department of Munitions and Supply in conjunction with the Dominion Department of Agriculture, the Wartime Prices and Trade Board, the National Research Council and the manufacturers have looked into the matter of rubber rings for canning jars and several months ago developed specifications which will provide satisfactory rings.

So far, technical difficulties have made it inadvisable to use synthetic rubber for this purpose. Experiments are being conducted and these difficulties may yet be overcome. Meanwhile, the highest grade reclaim obtainable is being used.

Last fall complaints were received and through the co-operation of housewives actual jars of fruit, sealers, rubber rings and screw tops were examined. All these exhibits were carefully tested, and in some cases investigators went into homes and made tests on other cans of fruit and vegetables. As a result of these careful investigations, it was determined that only a fractional percentage of the spoilage could be attributed definitely to faulty rubber rings. There are many factors which enter into successful canning and often it is impossible to ascertain the precise reason for failure.

To assist women in employing the most modern home canning methods, the Dominion Department of Agriculture has issued a booklet entitled "Wartime Home Canning of Fruits and Vegetables" which can be obtained without charge from the Dominion Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Water Supplies, Etc.

Once more, we are pleased to announce that The North-West Line Elevators Association will be represented on the B class fair circuit by an agricultural exhibit.

No effort is spared to make the exhibit interesting, instructive and attractive. The main theme is always developed around an important agricultural problem. This year, farm water supply is being featured. In addition, side exhibits have been prepared on wheat stem sawfly, cereal by-products industrial uses of wheat and barley, seed germination and disease, etc.

It is a pleasure to acknowledge the generous assistance of officials of the Dominion Department of Agriculture particularly those engaged in P.F.R.A. work. Model dugouts and dams have been prepared to show that proper construction and position in relation to farm buildings and fields can be illustrated. Additional detail is provided in a pamphlet which will be available to all visitors.

Everett Robertson, B.S.A., will accompany the exhibits as agricultural adviser. One of his chief duties will be to redirect enquiries to the proper government and university authorities. This service has been popular with farmers in past years, and they are assured of the usual welcome this year.

The exhibit will be displayed at the following fairs: — Swift Current, Estevan, Moose Jaw, Calgary, Yorkton, Melfort, Lloydminster, Vermilion, Vegreville, Red Deer, North Battleford and Prince Albert

OF TAXIS AND $27,200

On a warmish June afternoon our thoughts idly turn to money. Not necessarily the World Monetary Conference in the New Hampshire hills, though climatically speaking we view that as one of the better news assignments of the year, but thinking of Edward Waters and his $27,-[illegible]

He found it. He's a taxi driver in New York and on this certain day a certain genial, ruddy-faced man, about 5 foot 9, who seems to have been the sort that could easily get lost in a crowd, stepped blithely from the cab, paid his fare, bestowed a tip and walked away.

Always on the lookout for $27,200, our Mr. Waters glanced in the cab, saw two exceedingly attractive white envelopes with just a wisp of green edging. "Hey" yelled Mr. Waters. "You forgot your—ah—packages!"

But the genial man only turned, shook his head with a smile Mr. Waters will never forget and vanished into the crowd. Mr. Waters took his find to the police station where experts pronounced it genuine, put it in the safe and informed Mr. Waters that if no one else proves ownership within six months the $27,200 is his "for keeps."

Mr. Waters, who we presume now has something to regale his passengers with besides the weather and the Roosevelt Administration, is settling down to the long watch. It may be a pretty long six months. — Christian Science Monitor.

WAR SAVINGS STAMPS

June 30, 1944 is set aside in Edmonton as "Stamp Day". The effort will be similar to the fifteen minutes campaign of two years ago. This year, however, sales effort will continue throughout the day. All types of industries are requested to help this movement so that it will become an outstanding success. Publicity of varying kinds will be left to individual stores and business establishments.

The theme for the day is "A 25 cent War Savings Stamp will buy 12 rifle bullets". With the invasion, ammunition, together with every other form of weapons and equipment required to accompany reinforcements, this slogan should be readily accepted by the general public. Stamp Day is stated to be a contribution towards re-equipment and a concrete indication of giving support. Many Edmontonians in all lines of business are giving time to plan for this occasion and make it an outstanding success. Tofield and surrounding points will also participate in a stamp day.

In spite of the weather man, the Ministik and Looma Vista Young People's held their joint weiner roast and bonfire last Saturday night, July 1st. To the thirty young people present, the weather had anything but a dampening effect. A team under Albert (Slim) Kallis played three innings of soft-ball against a team led by Bill Roddick; there were other games, a sing-song and eats. Miss Margaret Latter, Provincial Y.P. President was present and brought greetings from the provincial organization. The affair was pronounced a success, and it is hoped to have another later in the summer.

Ministik friends of Mr. and Mrs. M. Carr, now of Dewdney, B.C. wish to express their regret on hearing of their illness, and hope that it will soon be a thing of the past.

BLOOD DONORS

Owing to unavoidable circumstances, the visit of the Mobile Blood Clinic to Tofield, has been indefinitely postponed.

It seems to me in these days of stress and strain, that there is no more impatient man than the one we see running up an escalator. —Indianapolis News.

Sports Day A Success Despite Morning Rain

July 1st at Tofield this year dawned anything like a typical sports day. Light showers which later developed into a steady rain made it appear as if a wash out was inevitable, in fact at one time a postponement of the day's events was decided upon, but later changed. By eleven o'clock it had turned out fine and by two o'clock the day's doings were on.

BASEBALL

(Frank Johnsrud)

At noon when the weather had finally settled, there was a junior ball game between Tofield and McKenzie. This was a close contest, McKenzie winning 5-4.

ROUND HILL—TOFIELD

The first senior game was between Tofield and Round Hill. The boys from the south had car trouble and were late in coming so there resulted a slight delay. However the game got under way and Tofield got an early lead which they never lost. Harry Lee gave a fine display of pitching and won the game 7-1 for the locals.

DODDS—McKENZIE

The next game was between Dodds and McKenzie. Dodds with their powerful batters and fine fielding performances held the McKenzie men scoreless, while they themselves scored five runs. Glen Olson hit the only home run of the day, late in the game for Dodds. The batteries for McKenzie were: D. Phillips, and Jones; and for Dodds: Nelson and Hjelter.

The final game started at seven. There were many spectators and the competition in this contest was keen. Bud Steen started pitching for Dodds while Stauffer started for Tofield. Dodds got a lead and they seemed to have an edge in the play. Tofield made many hits but seemed to be weak in batting the runs in. They did threaten in the sixth however, and sent Steen to the showers, but Ted Appleby relieved and retired the side. The score at that time was 6-5, but in the last innings the Dodds men got three more to win by a margin of 9-5.

The boys from Dodds were jubilant and had reason to be because it marked the first time that they had captured the event in Tofield. Despite the fact that for many years they have been one of the strongest baseball teams around, they have always been jinxed on the day of the Tofield Sports.

PAST RECORDS

It is interesting to note that in the last twelve years the home team have won all but four events. Tofield won the tournament in 33 and 34, Rose Creek in 35, then the locals won again in '36. In '37 a young team from Ryley won, but the home team won again in '38, '39 and '40. In '41 the 1st money was won by Holden and in '42 and '43 it was again Tofield. This year Dodds deserves the congratulations on a team that was well balanced both at bat and in the field.

SOFTBALL

We regret we have no authentic information about teams and winners on this. We were down to the softball diamond a few times but everyone appeared too excited to know teams, players or scores.

RACES

The usual run of races were held and as usual the younger folk got quite a thrill out of competing and winning.

THE BOOTH

Pies, coffee and hot dogs vanished like dew before the morning sun. Booth attendants were kept on the jump and lemonade by the gallon just gurgled down.

[illegible]

Some veteran horseshoe players were playing their favorite game on the side and seemed to be thoroughly enjoying it.

THE GAMES

Milk bottle, crown and anchor, and hoopla were well patronized and did their full share to swell the Red Cross funds.

THE DANCE

The dance as usual was crowded to capacity and everyone seemed to be having a good time. Due to it being Sunday, dancing ceased at one o'clock.

FASHION AROUND THE CLOCK

On Monday afternoon of this week in the Variety Theatre, the Senior and Intermediate household economics classes presented "Fashion Around The Clock." The senior girls followed the clock from early morning rising time till dancing time in the evening, modelling garments they had made during the past school term. Presenting a fashion show within a fashion show, the Intermediate girls did their share of modelling. Apart from the garments modelled, many items of the girls' handiwork were displayed along the walls of the theatre. A silver collection was taken for the Red Cross.

SHOP WORK

The boys and some girls who have during the past term been taking Manual training classes, also held a display of finished and unfinished products. There were excellent wooden lamp stands, bowls, cupboards, stands, etc. A feature of the display was the work of the girls who also took the shop work course.

Industry

(THE LOCOMOTIVE)

The smoke-jet bursts above the blacken'd top,
The warning bell still lingers on the air,
The steam-roll shadows o'er the hopeful crop,
And fades at length above the flowers fair.

The laden trucks are on the road be-times,
They search their path by steadied eye and hand,
From rural homes to city tower and chimes,
While pulsing labor broadens o'er the land.

How well, how wise in complex life to seek
The grace that links us with the plan Divine,
That purpose true, and efforts ofttimes weak,
May in the higher light with honor shine.

—S. C. VANCE, Kingman.

NATIONAL PARKS OPEN TO VISITORS

National parks in Alberta are open to visitors, even though the railway hotels are not open owing to war conditions, it is pointed out by officials of the Alberta Motor Association.

Recently, residents of the parks reported that there was evidence of a general impression that the parks were closed to all traffic. Such is not the case.

The Jasper-Lake Louise scenic highway was reported to be in good shape by travelers who covered the route recently. It is anticipated that there will be a good number of tourists travel that way this season.

Federal park officials have stated there are indications that there will be considerable holiday business this year. One large hotel is reported to have been booked up for the entire month of July.

This year, owing to the war, many car owners are expected to make only short trips to the parks, instead of traveling long distances, thus conserving fuel and tires. Holiday groups are being organized for park [illegible]

The Mennonite Corner

WEDDING

BOETTGER—YODER

Wedding vows were exchanged by Edith Marie Yoder, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. L. Yoder, and Marvin W. Boettger, at 8 o'clock Thursday evening, June 29th, in the Mennonite church. Bishop J. B. Stauffer performed the ceremony. As the bridal party entered the church, a quartet sang "O Perfect Love" and at the close of the service "O Love Divine."

The bride wore a slipper length gown of white sheer and carried a white Bible. The bridesmaids, Misses Ruth Voegtlin and Evelyn Stauffer, were dressed in pastel shades of blue and yellow respectively. The groom was attended by Messrs. Eldon Boettger and Leonard Wideman.

Following the ceremony a supper was served to 175 guests at the home of the bride's parents. A three-tiered wedding cake and a beautiful bouquet of pink, red and white peonies and gladioli centered the table, with smaller bouquets of pinks and carnations.

The bridal pair were the recipients of many beautiful gifts and best wishes for future happiness. They left for a short honeymoon to Banff. For travelling the bride wore a black suit with black accessories.

A shower for the bride was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Voegtlin, June 23. Many gifts and a small purse of money were presented.

CHAPTER IX

SYNOPSIS

Released from prison after serving fifteen years for a murder he didn't commit Mark Grant goes to the office of a lawyer named Fosdick to collect a legacy left to him while he was in prison. When Fosdick tells him he will have to wait, Mark accepts an invitation to a party to help Teddy Banks win a bet with Archie Landon. Although Mark tells them his real name Archie introduces him as "Stewart Byram." At the party Mark meets Burleson the man who sent him to prison and Burleson's niece, Pamela Rodney. Burleson does not recognize him, and Mark decides not to reveal his identity to Pam until he finds the real murderer. Fosdick warns of his deception. Pam asks Burleson to give her his little jade god and is surprised when he angrily refuses and tells her he is going to smash it before he dies. When Teddy Banks learns Mark's identity from Fosdick he tells Archie Landon jealous of Mark's attentions to Pam, goes to Mark's room but Mark is not there. Landon then hails a taxi, directing the driver to Burleson's address.

Pam had ordered her little tea table carried into the library. She rarely made tea there unless Burleson asked it, but today he was out and the great fireplace tempted her. It was a gray day and the leap of the fire would be like the heart of a welcome---warm and bright. Besides, she loved the library itself, especially when the logs burned there. The flame-light touched here and there on a bit of brass or a fine old ivory. There was a mellowness of tones in book-bindings, in the one or two rare old prints, that made the place so restful, the wide windows looked across a city park, she could absolutely glimpse the sky, and today it was adrift with cloud-mists. It was nearly five o'clock. She had barely time to give a few more dainty touches to her tea-table. She had a slender vase of flowers; she shifted it from one place to another, then her eye caught the glimmer of the green jade god on her uncle's library table. The sight of it recalled his face yesterday, the sudden red streak between his brows; she stood an instant looking at the curious little green image, its uncanny, elfish face, its pointed beard, green as seaweed, its perfect hands. It squatted as an Oriental god should, and the light from the fire gleamed on its bald jade head. Suddenly fancy seized her; she lifted it and put it gently down on her table beside the flowers. It squatted there like a toad, an it seemed to her it grinned up at her. She felt like snatching it off again, then she laughed at herself.

"Uncle can lend it to me for an hour anyway," she thought, and glancing again at the clock, forgot it.

Mark was coming! Her heart was beating; in spite of herself she felt a tremor of uneasiness. She tried to thrust out disturbing thoughts, but old Fosdick's manner, his treatment of the man had been so---so disconcerting! She was a little disturbed still, though her eyes were shining, when there was a stir in the hall, the lifting of a portiere, a new voice, and then the tall man with the level eyes.

She held out a frank hand. "I'm so glad you could come!" she said; "I thought it might be hard for you to find the time."

He took her hand and held it, looking down into her eyes.

"It's been a thousand times harder to stay away," he replied simply, "and I've tried---I never meant to come here again!"

She gave him a questioning look; the firelight caught her face and showed it ivory pale.

"I don't know what you mean, but you'll tell me?" she breathed softly.

"I came to tell you."

"Sit down then, let me give you a cup of tea," her voice faltered. She moved to her place behind the table, trying to hide her eyes from him.

"No!" he said quickly.

Suddenly, impulsively, she put her hand out and touched his arm.

"It can't be as bad as that---and I'm your friend!" she assured him sweetly.

He caught her hand and kissed it passionately; then he let it drop and folded his arms.

"I'm not fit to do that," he said harshly, "I've played a part."

As he spoke he looked around at her and saw the small pale oval of her face, her dark hair and her red lips. She seemed almost a child — he wanted to take her in his arms. But, sitting there with the conventional tea table between them, he told her the simple truth about his meeting with Landon and Banks, and the wager.

"I was nothing but a shabby impostor, even my name's false," he said bitterly. "I don't deserve to be spoken to. It burns me up with shame. I made a vow I wouldn't come back here under false pretenses. I was going away when you met me the other day. You ought to refuse to speak to me!"

She seemed to consider this, for she said nothing for a while, and her silence hurt him; it brought his misdemeanor home to him. She did not think him fit to speak to! He studied her profile, she had averted her face, and it seemed to him that he found something stern and resolute in it that he had not seen before.

"I can't understand," she said in a low voice, "why a man like you should come here like that! To let yourself be---well, be brought here on a wager."

His face crimsoned, she saw his strong hands clench and unclench; the veins stood out on them. "To make you understand that I'd have to tell you the story of my life," he replied hoarsely, "the whole story!"

He was leaning forward now, his elbows on his knees, and his face worked as he stared into the fire. The fire that was to have been the heart of his welcome! There was a silence; she could hear his breath come hard.

She had waited a long time. "Yes?" she said at last, gravely, interrogatively.

He straightened up, his haggard eyes met hers. "My God, I---I can't do that!" he cried brokenly; "I'm a coward---I can't do that!"

But she was silent, waiting. It seemed to him that the whole room growing dim in its corners with the early winter twilight---was full of strange shadowy forms---also waiting! The girl's quiet attitude, the curve of her cheek turned toward him, gave no hint of the turmoil in her own mind. She recalled---too vividly---Fosdick's attitude, his lean old black-clad shoulder turned on the younger man, the biting mockery of his tone when he repeated the name, "Byram" a false name, as she knew now. She was shaken with dismay, yet his very presence there appealed to her, reassured her belief in him. He was so big, so wholesome, so honest looking! It was impossible that there was anything behind it all that could change him utterly.

"What is your name?" she asked him, in a low voice, watching him.

He lifted his head. Would this end it? Would she know at once?

"Mark Grant," he replied slowly, letting the two words drop into the silence. Then he turned and looked at her. She did not know! How could she? It was fifteen years ago! The relief of her ignorance made his heart leap; she did not recoil, she did not look abhorrance at him, the name meant nothing to her. She was still concerned with the wager.

"I can't see how you came to do it," she repeated. "Teddy Banks---" her gesture was disdainful--- "and Landon, I know them! But you---"

"If it will help you to understand, I'll tell you that I had eighty cents in my pocket that night, my aunt had left me a legacy but I couldn't get it at once. I was a bit of driftwood, alone in the city, ripe for mischief, it seems. There's no excuse, I make none, but this---" he lifted his head---"I never thought of meeting you!"

Their eyes met and held each other, she could see the flicker of the flame in his.

"You're not telling me all!" she cried impulsively, and then, remembering herself, "don't! I don't ask it; I---" she held out her hand---"I'm still your friend."

"You forgive me for---coming here like that?" he exclaimed.

She nodded; she could not speak, for he had her hand in both his; she could feel the emotion that shook him. But still he did not speak.

"I think you must have had some reason for it," she said simply; "I can't believe ill---of you."

"Don't look at me like that!" he exclaimed; "turn your eyes away! For I've no right to speak to you until I tell you---I've been in prison."

In the silence a log fell from the andirons and a mass of sparks flew up the black throat of the chimney. He did not look at her---he waited. Then he heard her voice, and it was astonishingly clear and cheerful.

"That doesn't shake my belief in you, you see, I'm your friend."

He drew a long breath, lifting his eyes again to hers. She looked so calm that it shook him with a new and deep excitement; she believed in him; it was the most marvelous thing in the world!

"And you don't ask me about it? Nor why I was sent there?" he cried.

She shook her head, smiling. "You're my friend," she repeated softly.

The beauty of it swept him off his feet. He caught her hands in his, in another moment he would have told her that he loved her---told her the whole story---but his eyes fell suddenly on a green thing on the table at her elbow, a squat shining figure, marvelously carved it was, the face ---cunning and old as the ages---was grinning up at him---one of the small hands pointed. Her hands slipped out of his, he reached for the jade god and lifted it, turning it over slowly in his hands. Underneath, where the fat-bodied goblin sat so squat, the jade was smooth except for a cipher or a dent, something that marked it indelibly. Mark ran his finger along the broken surface and felt it. Then he looked at the queer elfin face again and his own face went white.

"My God," he said below his breath, "how did it come here---here of all places?"

"You know it?" Pam leaned forward, her own face flushed. "What is it? What's the matter?"

He had collected himself, but he held the god hard in one of his powerful hands.

"Where did you get this---thing?" he demanded, and, for the moment, even the girl herself seemed to melt away from the reality of the thing he held!

"It's uncle's." She was shaken by his emotion, she felt the tension, the excitement of his discovery. "He wouldn't give it to me---I put it here for---fun!"

He looked at her for the first time without seeming to be aware of her; his face was so white that his eyes looked black.

"Where's your uncle?" he asked excitedly.

"He ought to be here soon. It's late for him now," she glanced toward the window.

It was quite dark outside; the eye of a street-lamp flickered in her eyes. The room was dim except for the fire and lamp behind her chair. Its radiance lifted her figure out of the gloom and touched her cheek, her chin, her young full throat.

Mark, holding the jade god in his hands, looked down at her and seemed to come to himself.

"I must see your uncle," he said gravely. The girl's eyes traveled from his face to the ugly green jade god in his hands.

"That's the key to something," she said excitedly, "I see that! Will it---help you?"

"It will---if your uncle will tell me about it---tell me where he got it. I know when---I know almost to a minute about that!"

She rose and came over to him, touching it in his hands, wonder in her eyes. "It has always held me---was this why?"

He did not touch her; he knew that she cared; but she might have been wrapped in fire, he would never take her in his arms until he was cleared! But his eyes held hers.

"If you hear hard things of me, unbelievable things, will you trust me? Will you believe in me?" he demanded passionately. "Can you---believe in me, Pam?"

It was the first time he had spoken her name thus, and she was touched by it. It had a new sound on his lips, he made it a symbol of love---the love he could not claim.

"I'll believe in you!" she smiled back bravely, but her eyes were wet with tears; she suddenly saw his hands again and now she understood---they were the hands of a prisoner, knotted with work!

COUNTRY STORES INCREASE BUSINESS

Canada's country storekeeper is not only doing the best business in years, but has forged far ahead of all other classes of merchants since the war began. Country general stores have improved their sales by approximately 60 per cent over 1939, according to official estimates.

Sales volume for 1943 as compared with 1942 shows these changes in various categories:

Department stores and mail order houses	-1.8
Chain Stores	-2.2
Independents (exclusive of country general stores	-3.2
Country general stores	-0.5

Retail sales show the largest increases in the provinces which have relatively more country general stores than others, the Maritimes reporting a rise of 9.3 per cent for 1943 over 1942, and the Prairie provinces an increase of 8.4 per cent.

The brisk increase in country store sales is attributed to several factors. The rural merchant finds his supply problem simplified by the Wartime Prices and Trade Board's policy of equitable distribution which assures him a fair share of available goods. Officials of the Retail Administration and other administrations of the Board have leaned over backward in their efforts to have small traders dealt with fairly, while the Wholesale Administration has been interested in doing everything possible to assist distribution through wholesalers to the independent trade.

Weekly Editor Looks At Ottawa

By JIM GREENBLAT

Speaking in the House of Commons on the bill to establish a federal Department of Reconstruction, Prime Minister King stated there should be no difficulty in securing money for reconstruction purposes. Having raised money during the war by loans and taxation to destroy lives and property his opinion was that. "When the whole picture is reversed, and it comes to the matter of carrying out constructive work, for the rebuilding of communities, for the supplying of homes, necessities and luxuries of life there is going to be a demand for employment the like of which could not arise at any other time." Greatest planning, he thought, was for the period following transition when full employment would be very necessary.

Here was a tough nut for the Consumer Branch.

For many weeks there has been no end of discussion on the question of who should get the sugar coupons (canning) of the school teacher who is boarding in the community, shortly leaving on holidays. The director at Ottawa says she has no authority to rule one way or another. If the teacher is leaving her boarding house to go for the summer, she should make arrangements to let her landlady have some of her canning sugar coupons. Otherwise she would not be entitled to any of the preserves which would undoubtedly be served her next winter. There is certainly a fair solution to the problem and it's up to the individual concerned to find it.

Among the many boons which will be the lot of civilians after this war is over, is a new insecticide popularly known as DDT. It is now used all over the world by fighting forces as well as in recently liberated countries to counteract the effects of lice, which spread typhus. A 5 per cent solution of DDT in kerosene, sprayed on walls of barns, stables, etc., is an effective fly killer good for several weeks at a stretch. It is fatal to mosquitoes in minute preparations.

Signs of inflation developed in 1941, before wage and price control was introduced. In the six months preceding, prices were rising three times as fast as in the earlier part of the war. This is a significant fact many may not have known. If the cost of living had been allowed to rise unchecked, living standards would certainly have been progressively reduced. You know, industry and agriculture have undergone tremendous changes in the war years. Food production skyrocketed from 40 to 50 per cent. About a million persons have been added to the labour forces. More than 750,000 went into the armed forces. War expenditures last year purchased more goods and services than Canada produced altogether in 1939.

Canada's pension bill in respect to this war will be enormous. The Minister of Pensions said in the House of Commons that pensions costing $4,975,000 a year were being paid to 13,216 veterans of the present war at April 30. A federal department of Veterans' Affairs is being set up.

CROP SITUATION

The Alberta Wheat Pool "Budget" issued June 24 sums up by saying that the crop situation in Alberta shows the northern section of the province to be in excellent shape, the central much improved on the west side and the southern section needing more rain, particularly in the eastern parts. Prediction is made that Alberta will produce, if no calamity befalls, about 000,000,000 bushels of wheat this year.

THE LITTLE PIG FOUND THE ANSWER

Claresholm Local Press says that last week Alf. McAlister and Gordon Reeves were drilling a well on the Walls and Stark ranch. The hole was 22 ft. when they went in to dinner and upon returning they were surprised to find that two pigs had fallen down the hole stern first. The surprise was to find that one pig had climbed within 6 ft. of the top of the hole using the strategy of a human in holding his inch by inch gain through pressing its back against the opposite wall to the feet. Both pigs were recovered.

THE OUTLOOK—

RECENT UTTERANCES by famous statesmen and government officials of both Great Britain and the United States would lead one to believe that the end of the war if not to come in the immediate future is at least in sight. With this reasoning most people who follow war news and commentaries to any extent will agree. Recent United Nations successes in various war theatres have to some extent dispelled the sombreness so general during the early years of the war.

The United Nations are back in France and beating the Germans at their own game, land fighting. On the sea and in the air they have general superiority and it would now only seem to be a question of time before the Germans will be so badly "straffed" from the east and the west that either from exhaustion or lack of some essential material of war they will have to cry quits.

But this is really "arm chair reasoning," based perhaps on some wishful thinking. The truth of the matter is that while no doubt the time will come when Germany as a fighting nation will "fold-up", no person can give any degree of assurance when that time will come. Despite many mass bombings, despite being deprived of her sea power, despite even having her air force almost driven from the skies, Germany still possesses a formidable land fighting force and the armies of the United Nations are still a long way from Berlin. Even so, we believe victory in the European centre of war will come within a reasonable length of time. Perhaps this year, more probably next.

But after the European war is over there is still the Asiatic war to finish. Following the first rush of disastrous incidents through which Japan seized some of the richest equatorial possessions on the face of the globe, the United States and Great Britain have been steadily and surely loosening Japan's grip on valuable Pacific air and sea bases. So far Japan has not dared risk a major sea engagement involving the use of her main battle fleet, even though the American fleet has for some long time consistently sought such an engagement. If the Asiatic war runs true to form such an engagement will ultimately be fought and upon its outcome much will depend. If the United States' fleet scores a decisive victory in such an engagement Japan would be hopelessly crippled as far as giving adequate support to the armies now holding conquered territory, in fact losing such an engagement would be the beginning of the end for Japan's hopes of Asiatic conquest. Should the United States lose such a battle, with all her unparalleled industrialization behind her, it would simply mean more ships, more men, more guns, until ultimate victory.

There is however, a phase of the Asiatic war which due to the importance of recent European events has rarely been noticed. Few people realize that as Japan during the past two years has been waging a losing battle on the broad expanses of the Pacific, her armies, increasing in strength, have been making steady gains in China, and Japanese aggression has by now secured for Japan very large areas of China. Defeated on the sea it is expected Japan will wage war on land and war torn China will be the battle ground. To what extent China will be cleared of Japanese aggression and how long it will take the United Nations to accomplish this, no one at present knows, but that it will ultimately be done is an accepted belief.

So while in company with millions of troubled souls who are hoping against hope that the whole world may quickly return to ways of peace, we believe that despite cheering war news, this is not the time for super optimism. Rather it is a time for grim endeavor so that the peace we all desire may come all the sooner.

COMMUNICATION

To the Editor,

There appeared in a recent issue of a daily paper a news item about a woman in Picton, Ontario, who had received the thanks of two British prisoners of war in Germany for the socks she had sent them. The woman had inserted a note in the toe of the socks.

My purpose in writing to you is to ask your further co-operation and that of the News Desk in the handling of this type of item with extreme caution. Under ordinary circumstances the news story that appeared in the daily paper would be most helpful and a kindly gesture towards the cause of the Canadian Red Cross, but in this case it might have very violent repercussions. The Canadian Red Cross is under solemn obligation to see that no notes or communications pass to prisoners of war with our food parcels, next-of-kin parcels or the supplies shipped in bulk to the camps. If a note were found in any of these parcels, it might result in no further parcels being distributed until each one was personally censored, and the free delivery of these parcels depends upon the fulfilment of our obligations that nothing of the sort will be put in.

During the last war the Germans found that cigarette papers were being used for the purpose of sending notes to prisoners of war, with the result that all parcels were opened and the cigarette papers taken from them. We have never been able to resume shipping any.

I wish to say how greatly we appreciate the publicity that you give us from day to day, and it is the fact that I know how anxious you are to help us that makes me feel that I can write you frankly as to the dangers in such a matter as this.

Yours sincerely,
J. N. KELLY,

ALBERTA FARMERS' UNION STARTS FUND TO HELP FARMERS IN FLOOD AREA

To the Editor,

An Executive meeting of the Alberta Farmers' Union was held in the Head Office of the Union at 102 LaFleche Building, 102nd street, Edmonton, on Tuesday, 27th June. An important resolution, dealing with the victims of the recent flood in the Pembina Valley, was passed authorizing an immediate appeal to all members to subscribe to a fund for the relief of farmers who are suffering by reason of the efforts of this serious flood.

BEEKEEPERS URGED WATCH THE ROBBERS

There is nothing more devastating in an apiary than a bad case of robbing. Once it is well started there is little the beekeeper can do to stop it without loss, says C. B. Gooderham, Dominion Apiarist, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa.

While robbing may occur at any time there is a dearth of nectar the most dangerous period is during the fall immediately following the close of the main honey flow. This is especially true in regions where there is little or no fall flow. While there is a plentiful supply of food available in the field all is well, but when this supply slackens trouble may be expected and weak colonies are apt to be robbed and destroyed. There is nothing more persistent than robber bees, for once they have been able to secure stolen sweets they will go almost to any extreme to obtain more.

As robbing is much more easily prevented than cured, the beekeeper should make sure that the bees do not have an opportunity to steal. When removing honey from the colonies, take it at once to the honey house and make sure the building is bee-tight, for any opening large enough to admit a bee will be found and used. Once the main flow is over, reduce all hive entrances to at least three inches and even smaller than this if the colony is weak. Do not examine colonies except under a bee tent for the robbers will follow the operator from hive to hive and if they gain an entrance and are able to secure a load of honey they will be back for more, and the colony will quickly be ruined. If any feeding has to be done, do it in the evening after all bee flight has stopped.

If robber bees are hovering around weak colonies they may be drawn off by placing some thin sugar syrup in an open feeder a short distance from the apiary. Should robbing get started in any colony move it to the bee cellar for two or three days until the tendency to rob has ended. A little care following the main honey flow will prevent considerable trouble and possible loss of colonies.

WORLD OF WHEAT

THE QUESTION OF FREE TRADE

The importance of the freedom of international trade is gradually dawning on our farmers, and on many other persons both in Canada and in the United States.

We are all beginning to realize that it is only proper and fair that the excess foodstuffs we produce, and which we cannot consume ourselves, should be made available on reasonable terms to the people who live in crowded cities in other countries, and who cannot grow their own food. We are beginning to realize, too, that these reasonable terms are no more or less than that we should accept their money in payment for the foodstuffs we produce, and which they so badly need for their very existence. We are beginning slowly to understand that the only kind of money these hungry people have in the long run is the fruit of their own toil, the goods and commodities they themselves have produced.

This all means, in short, that if we are to sell our excess foodstuffs to these many millions of people in many other countries, then we must be willing to accept their goods and commodities in exchange. This can only be done by tearing down those evil tariffs and quotas which today, and for some twenty-five years past, have obstructed foreign goods and commodities from crossing our frontiers.

ELECTION WILL BE HELD BEFORE JULY 1945

No extension of the life of the present Parliament is to be made, Prime Minister King made clear to Parliament. In the Commons the Prime Minister said that "there may be an election this year or next," but certainly before July 1, 1945. Term of Parliament expires next spring. The Prime Minister said that family allowances will not be brought in until after the election, as he did not want cheques going out to Canadians just before an appeal to the people as had been done by a Conservative Government.

AMPLE EVIDENCE

At the age of 16 the late Supreme Court Justice Louis Brandeis went to Europe with his parents, and while there attended school at Dresden.

Before admitting the prize student from Kentucky, the headmaster of the school demanded certificates of birth and vaccination. Young Brandies did not have the certificates but he did have a ready tongue.

"Why do you need the certificates?" he asked.

"As proof, of course," said the headmaster.

"To prove that I was vaccinated you have only to look at my arm," replied Brandeis, "and the fact that I am here to show you the arm should be ample proof that I was born."

He was admitted. — Milwaukee Journal.

Drought Resistance

Despite the favourable moisture conditions prevailing in the Prairie Provinces during recent years, we must not forget that drought is still the greatest hazard in the production of crops and livestock.

There is no evidence that the amount or seasonal distribution of rainfall can be influenced by man, in spite of claims sometimes made by enthusiastic tree planters. Therefore, all we can do is to make better use of the rainfall we get. Broadly speaking, this is done in three ways. The first involves water-saving devices, such as dams and dugouts for farmstead water supplies and even for small scale irrigation. The second involves tillage practices which prevent or reduce runoff and which control weeds.

The third method is concerned with the use of drought resistant varieties or crops. A drought resistant crop is one which makes efficient use of a limited supply of moisture. For example, crested wheat grass is drought resistant; timothy is not. Similar, though smaller, differences may be observed between different varieties of wheat. On the open plains, where moisture is usually limited, some varieties yield more than others, but the differences are less pronounced than that between crested wheat grass and timothy. Writers and speakers who offer hope that the drought problem will be solved by resistant varieties as was the rust problem are false prophets. Our wheat breeders will make progress but it will be slow and gradual. Don't look for a "Russian Thistle" wheat variety.

DUTIES LIFTED ON MACHINERY

Ottawa—Farmers and other consumers purchasing imported agricultural equipment and repair parts will benefit from the government action in removing consumer duties and war exchange on these items as announced in the Budget speech. The Wartime Prices and Trade Board announced that an order had been passed by which importers, wholesalers and dealers are required to pass on to the consumer any reduction in their laid down costs resulting from the government action.

Distributors with stocks of imported farm machinery on hand, on which these duties have already been paid, are allowed to dispose of these implements at current levels until the stocks are liquidated.

AIR FORCE RECRUITING STILL SUSPENDED

Ottawa—Recruiting for the Royal Canadian Air Force has been suspended until Oct. 1, 1944, Air Minister C. G. Power anounced here today.

At the same time, Power disclosed a number of readjustments in the British Commonwealth Air Training plan, including an extension of the training time of pilots.

The readjustments have been made possible, the air minister said, as a result of a lower number of air force casualties over the past few months and during the early stage of the invasion. The total number of casualties, he said, have been lower than had been envisaged.

$1,000,000 FUND FOR HOME BUILDING

A combined government-municipal housing plan in which the province is prepared to make available a minimum of $1,000,000 for 4 per cent loans for home building, was announced by Hon. Lucien Maynard, attorney general, before the annual convention of the Union of Municipalities at Calgary last week.

It is the intention to form a province-wide building association in which municipalities will be invited to subscribe for shares along with the government. The shares will not yield dividends or interest.

The amount subscribed will be placed in a revolving fund to be made available to the public for home building purposes at interest not to exceed 4 per cent. The scheme will be operative in rural and urban areas provided the municipal government has joined the association.

Nothing in the proposal is intended to prevent any group of people from establishing a voluntary co-operative housing association under the Building Association Act, but Mr. Maynard said the government felt the urgency of the problem could not be left entirely to the small co-operatives.

"There may be some legal technicalities that will have to be removed before this program can be fully implemented. After the municipal organizations in the province have given us an indication they are prepared to enter into a housing program along the lines outlined, and after the necessary details have been worked out by a committee of municipal and government officials, the government is prepared to call a special session of the legislature, necessary to do so, in order to implement the program this year," he said.

ONE MAN'S INcome IS ANOTHER MAN'S OUTgo...

If rising prices and costs were allowed to keep pushing each other up, inflation would be unavoidable. That's what inflation is—a panic rise in prices—with money losing its value and confusion everywhere. To prevent inflation, a ceiling has been set on prices and profits,—wages and salaries have been controlled.

If one person demands higher prices another higher profits—another a higher wage or salary—soon everybody would be making the same demands—demands on everyone else.

Then costs of production could not be controlled.

The ceiling could no longer be held.

Living costs would go up—and INcome OUTgo begin their frantic rise.

Wedding bells are being heard today, July 15th, as Miss Elsie Curtis daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Curtis of Ministik, is being married to Marcel Theriault of Calgary. Following the wedding the newly-marrieds will honeymoon in Banff. Ministik and Leoma Vista districts join in wishing the young couple every success and happiness.

Sid Roland is at present on leave visiting his brother, Russell.

Sgt. Ed Stevens, B.E.M. of the RCAF, was home last week-end visiting his family in Ministik. He has now returned to his station near Penhold.

Mrs. E. Giles who has been visiting here and in Edmonton from Vancouver, has a pungent remark to make about our weather. She says that people talk about the rain they have out at the coast, but that it hasn't a patch on our rain. Out there, it rains but you don't get wet, but here . . . We'd gladly settle for a little rain that didn't wet us, Mrs. Giles—the drier the better, in fact!

Among Ministik young people seen at the weekly dance at Lindbrook Hall were Bill George, Sid Roland and Keith Williams, and Lloyd Grummett.

WEDDING

APPLEBY—ZIEGLER

On Thursday, June 29th, 1944, at 4:00 p.m., the United Church of Vegreville was the scene of a charmingly appointed wedding, when Barbara, younger daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ziegler of Vegreville became the bride of Clifford Thomas, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Appleby of Tofield.

The bride, who entered the church on the arm of her father, was attended by her matron-of-honor, Mrs. Edward Sanford and bridesmaids, Lois and Lorraine Ziegler, cousins of the bride. The groom was supported by Mr. Stanley Sears of Tofield. The ushers were Berton and Gordon Ziegler, brothers of the bride.

Rev. D. K. Allan of Tofield, officiated at the impressive ceremony which was witnessed by a large number of friends and relatives. Mrs. W. Clements played the wedding march and furnished music during the signing of the register. The church was tastefully decorated with baskets of peonies.

The bride was charmingly dressed in a floor-length two-piece dress of white lace over taffeta and wore a finger-tip length veil of white net. Her only ornament was a delicate pendant, a gift of the groom. The bride carried a bouquet of carnations and roses. The matron-of-honor wore a floor-length blue sheer dress with a corsage of roses. The bridesmaids wore floor-length yellow sheer dresses with matching picture hats, and carried nosegays of roses and sweetpeas. The groom's mother wore navy with white accessories, and the bride's mother was dressed in blue with navy and white accessories. Both wore corsages of red roses.

Following the ceremony, friends and relatives gathered for the reception at the home of the bride's parents. During the reception, Keith Appleby, accompanied by Betty Stinson, rendered very pleasing violin and piano duets. Out-of-town guests included Mr. and Mrs. J. Appleby and Keith; Mrs. McConnell; Mrs. E. Sears; Messrs. Joe and Kenneth Kallal; Mr. and Mrs. W. Davison; Mr. Harvey McGinitie; Miss Betty Stinson; Miss Norma Scott, all of Tofield. Mr. and Mrs. H. The bride's going away costume consisted of a blue crepe dress trimmed with lace medallions over which she wore a blue Chesterfield coat with black and white accessories. Following the honeymoon trip to Jasper and Banff, the young couple will reside near Tofield.

The JADE GOD

By Mary Imlay Taylor

CHAPTER X

SYNOPSIS

Released from prison after serving fifteen years for a murder he didn't commit, Mark Grant goes to the office of a lawyer named Fosdick to collect a legacy left to him while he was in prison. When Fosdick tells him he will have to wait, Mark accepts an invitation to a party to help Teddy Banks win a bet with Archie Landon. Although Mark tells them his real name Archie introduces him as "Stewart Byram." At the party Mark meets Burleson, the man who sent him to prison, and Burleson's niece, Pamela Rodney. Burleson does not recognize him, and Mark decides not to reveal his identity to Pam until he finds the real murderer. Fosdick learns of his deception. Pam asks Burleson to give her his little jade god and is surprised when he angrily refuses and tells her he is going to smash it before he dies. When Teddy Banks learns Mark's identity from Fosdick he tells Archie. Landon, jealous of Mark's attentions to Pam, goes to Mark's room but Mark is not there. Landon then hails a taxi, directing the driver to Burleson's address. Meanwhile, Mark is at Burleson's with Pam. He tells her about the wager and confesses that he has been in prison. Suddenly he sees a familiar object—a little jade god. Pam tells him it is Burleson's and promises to help him when he tells her the jade god is important to him.

They were still standing thus, looking at each other, when there was the stir of an arrival in the hall, voices, the rush of cold air that comes from the opening of big doors. Mark looked at her questioningly; she nodded.

"It's Uncle—and Aunt Lynn."

Something like triumph came into his face; he gripped the jade god in one powerful hand, the other fell at his side, clenched.

"You're going to ask him now?" the girl breathed. She was only vaguely aware of the thing it meant to him, but she knew that it had some deep significance.

He nodded.

They were standing together on the hearthrug, the light of the lamp cast a soft glow behind them, outlining them. Mark looked like a man from another world, powerfully built, primitive, a pagan in his freedom from all the little rules and conventions that made up the lives of the people who lived there. The girl felt it—she made no attempt to restore things to more formalities; life was not like that for him! They stood waiting. They were still waiting silently when Mrs. Lynn came rustling in and, behind her, a little bowed about the shoulders, looking a little older, the millionaire himself. Mrs. Lynn, seeing the two, exclaimed:

"Why, Pamela, I thought you were out! Mr. Byram, please touch that light switch behind you. I hate gloom!"

Burleson laughed a little harshly. "Butterflies like light," he remarked humorously, smiling at his sister-in-law.

"Pam, I want some tea—" her aunt began, and then she stopped. She had become abruptly aware of their attitude, and she saw Mark's face. "Why, Mr. Byram!"

He did not seem to hear her; small courtesies were lost to him just then. He was as primitive as he had been marching in the prison-yard with his fellows—year after year. He walked slowly over to the library table where Burleson stood, and the elder man, searching his face in the new strong light, did not move. He seemed suddenly to see something in it that held him. Mark came nearer and opened his hands. In the hollow of his palms the jade god squatted like a toad. Burleson stared at it and stared up at the young man. He apparently linked the two by some chain of circumstances and the age in his own face deepened; the lines grew sharp, his eyes dulled. The two women watched them, Mrs. Lynn in amazement, Pam with a beating heart. It seemed eons before Mark spoke.

"I know this thing," he said slowly, "[illegible] underneath, see?" He turned it over, holding it close to Burleson. "Will you tell me when it came to you?"

Burleson's hands clenched, he grew grayly white, then, suddenly, that red streak ran up between his eyebrows to his hair. The effect was ghastly. Mrs. Lynn caught Pam's wrist in clutching fingers and whispered:

"Send that man away—your uncle's going to have a fit!"

Her voice was only a murmur but it broke the spell that held them—staring at the jade god.

"Will you tell me?" Mark repeated, in his deep voice, "you know me, Mr. Burleson?"

Burleson's nostrils quivered; his lips tightened until they were white, and the red streak was like Saint Anthony's fire across his face.

"Yes," he said slowly, "I know you now!" As he spoke he took an unsteady step forward and [illegible] a chair.

"[illegible]," Mark demanded [illegible] man, flinging [illegible] the jade god.

Burleson [illegible] and sounded back [illegible]. He was breathing hard, [illegible] a film seeped into his eyes, he [illegible] out his shaking hand, [illegible] the god and flung it with all his force into the corner. It struck the edge of the grate, mantle, tumbled, spun like a top against the brass fender and fell, broken in a thousand pieces on the floor.

For the last twenty minutes, while the jade god was meeting its fate, Landon's taxi had been speeding uptown. Landon himself was no longer impatient; he was glad of this chance to order his thoughts. It seemed certain that the bird had flown. In that case, was there any harm done? If Pam liked him she would have to forget him. It was plain to Landon that Mark's courage had failed.

"He didn't want to face the unmasking," he thought shrewdly; "he knew I'd have to do it."

Yet he was uneasy; so uneasy that he had made up his mind to see Mrs. Lynn and feel his way, find out if she knew anything, and if Mark Grant had been there again. If he kept up any effort to hold on to his acquaintance, he would denounce the convict rather than risk his making love to Pam Rodney. Girls were peculiar. The modern girl was independent, she might carry on a correspondence with an undesirable, unknown to her relatives. The thought made Landon furious; he was still stinging from the tone of her refusal, she had made it a little too plain that he, Landon, was totally uninteresting. He was ripe for mischief when the taxi drew up at the house.

At the door he got his first shock; Mrs. Lynn was at home but she was not alone; they had company— "a gentleman." Landon found out who it was without difficulty and his blood boiled. He promptly lost his head. The consequences to himself were not to be thought of. He had a weapon that would drive the intruder out of his paradise. He had intended to wait in the reception room, but as he entered it, he heard the crash of the jade god in the library and a startled cry from Pam. Landon cast prudence to the winds; he passed the servant who was going to announce him, lifted the portiere and appeared in the library. No one noticed him. Burleson had tottered as the jade god fell, his gray face was distorted with the red streak, his eyes flamed. He put out a long hand, a hand that used to be powerful, grasped the back of a chair and leaned on it. He was breathing audibly.

"You're ill!" cried Mrs. Lynn; "Pam, telephone for the doctor—your uncle's ill!" It seemed to her a relief, a valid excuse for such a scene!

"I'm not ill," Burleson said thickly, but his hands went to his throat, he sank heavily into his chair, his eyes fastened on Mark. "You—go away!" he exclaimed furiously.

Pam ran to him. "Uncle, what is it? Tell us!" she pleaded.

Mark had not moved. His eyes were fastened on the shattered green bits on the floor and there was something akin to anguish in his face. Burleson would never speak!

Mrs. Lynn, still in a panic, fled to the telephone. "We must have a doctor for you, Herbert!" she cried, and came face to face with Landon.

The young man was standing at the threshold, one hand still on the portiere, his face livid. He did not understand the scene, but he believed that Mark had come there to carry off Pam, that he was defying Burleson, and the girl loved him! It was the wildest fancy, but it kindled the spark.

"Why, Archie!" Mrs. Lynn's startled exclamation broke the spell; she stopped with her hand on the telephone receiver and gazed at the young man in open amazement. All her rules were being broken. When had he come? Why had no one announced him?

Landon did not notice her expression. He had made up his mind to burn his bridges. He walked into the room and stood in front of Mark.

"You've no right to stay in this house," he said in a choked voice; "the sooner you go the better—unless you want me to tell them the truth about you."

Mark looked at him and through him. "My business here isn't with you, but with Mr. Burleson," he answered crisply; "after that—perhaps!"

"Your business is with me," Landon panted, "for I brought you here. I—" he swung around, facing Mrs. Lynn's frozen look, Burleson's streaked face and Pam's indignant eyes. "I owe you all an apology! I brought this fellow here by mistake. I didn't know the truth. He's an ex-convict."

Mrs. Lynn hung up the receiver hastily and stood quite still. No one else moved, the color deepened in Pam's face but her hand still rested on Burleson's shoulder.

"I've already told Miss Rodney that," said Mark coolly; "you're a trifle late, Landon!"

"No, I'm not!" Landon retorted with a sudden wicked intuition, "you didn't tell the truth. Mr. Burleson, this man murdered his uncle for his money. Ask Fosdick — he knows."

A strange little sound like a moan came from the young girl; she crumpled to her knees beside her guardian's chair. Mark, disregarding them all, looked only at her. She had hidden her face in her hands and his heart turned cold, he had been right in his fears; she would not stand for this final awful charge, what woman would?

It seemed to freeze his emotions, even his anger, his contempt for Landon grew cold. He put up his hand with a futile gesture, brushing back the hair on his forehead. He felt himself suddenly a convict, he might have been marching with his mates to the jail, the rest of it was a dream. Then he heard Landon's voice shrill and womanish in its denunciation, and he longed to seize him—this puny product of society—and fling him out. He turned and looked at him with the contempt he felt, he was so big himself, he was so much of a pagan, as far as the world went, that it would have been nothing to pick the fellow up like a puppy, by the neck. His hand clenched at his sides, his breast heaved; he had taken a step forward when Burleson's voice arrested him.

"You'd better go," the millionaire said slowly, coughing a little, the red streak still flaring between his eyes. "There's nothing to say—here!"

Mark met his eyes; he hated the man for his injustice. He knew that Burleson could have helped him. He remembered his testimony against him, and he had the jade god all the time! No one had thought of that.

Landon, shaken by what he saw in Mrs. Lynn's stiffening face, in Pam's bowed head, pursued his point.

"He was up for murder—fifteen years," he said, "he's just out."

Mark turned on him then, and something in his look made the other man give way. Unconsciously, Landon stepped back and Mark passed him, taking his stand near the door before he turned to face them.

"He's told the truth; I'm an ex-convict and I was accused of killing my uncle," he said in a hard voice, "and this gentleman"—he indicated Landon scornfully—"introduced me here on a wager. That's all—quite all!" He stopped an instant, his eyes sought Pam and caught the lovely arch of her prone head beside her uncle's chair. She did not look up and a dull despair seized him. Not even she would believe in him!

"It's true," he said again in his hard voice, and his eyes flamed upon Landon, the wager-maker, the coward! "The convict bids you all good-by."

Again he looked at the girl, but she had not moved. He caught only the frozen horror in Mrs. Lynn's face, Burleson's grayness, Landon's anger and malice.

REQUESTS CO-OPERATION

The Director of Records, Army, Ottawa, has sent out a special request asking for the co-operation by the next-of-kin of Canadian soldiers serving overseas in notifying his department of changes of addresses, particularly vacation time movements.

It is pointed out that during the summer months many Canadians leave their permanent addresses for summer homes or resorts. If no forwarding address is left, telegraph companies encounter difficulty in making delivery of casualty telegrams.

It is further pointed out that next-of-kin be requested to always mention the rank and full christian names of officers in addition to surname and the number, rank and full christian names of other ranks, in addition to the surname. This facilitates matters in checking the enlistment cards of a particular name to find the name of a soldier.

CROP CONDITIONS

The latest crop report from the Western Producers gives the condition of crops over the entire province in comparison with the normal condition as follows: wheat, 88 per cent; oats, 90 per cent; barley, 91 per cent; flax, 77 per cent; rye, 79 per cent. The average height of wheat is 11 inches in comparison with 8 inches at this time last year.

The Alberta Wheat Pool in its report dated July 1, under the heading of "Variable Crop Conditions," makes the following remarks: "The best crops in Alberta are located in the northern districts centering on Edmonton, where moisture has been abundant. Some localities north of Edmonton have suffered from flooding.

In the Peace River district some localities have fairly good prospects but moisture reserve is generally low. Some wheat is heading out.

In west-central Alberta the condition of the crop is good and reserve moisture has been built up by June rains.

In east-central Alberta the conditions are not so good. Crops in southern Alberta are thin and patchy. A larger percentage of the wheat is now in the shot blade and early sown crops are beginning to head out.

The average height of all wheat is 11 inches compared with 8 inches at this time last year.

The above report covers conditions up to last Saturday. During the present week heavy showers fell along the west side of the Province from the U.S. Boundary to north of Calgary. These rains were heaviest in the regions adjacent to the foothills and did not extend very far out on the prairies".

LOST: On Wednesday, June 21st, from A. H. Martens farm, 7 miles west and 4 miles south of Tofield, a 200-pound white sow due to farrow in two weeks. Finder please notify A. H. Martens, Tofield

THRESHING OUTFITS TO BE GIVEN SPECIAL BORDER CROSSING ARRANGEMENTS

Reciprocal arrangements have been made between the United States and Canada, permitting grain threshing outfits of each country to cross the Border freely and to work in the other country, according to an announcement made by Hon. Humphrey Mitchell, Minister of Labour, today.

Under the special arrangements certain Border crossing formalities will be temporarily suspended from July 7th, to permit the exchange of threshing equipment and crews between Canada's Prairie Provinces and adjacent western States of the United States.

Canadian threshing outfits may remain in the United States until September 15th under this season's arrangement. United States machines and crews may enter Canada when their services are required, but may not remain longer than December 31st. In their announcement of the plan, the Governments of both countries point out that similar arrangements were in operation during the last two years, and will continue for the duration.

The agreement takes account of the fact that the grain harvesting in the United States is earlier, as a rule, than in Canada, and that not only will the Canadian crews be back here for harvesting, but that American crews will also be entering Canada when needed.

Mr. Mitchell explained that the negotiations had involved the co-operation of the Immigration Branch and the Dominion and Provincial Departments of Agriculture.

SLIGHT CHANGES IN PRICES OF CANNED VEGETABLES

Ottawa, July 10—Ceiling prices for the 1944 Canadian pack of canned vegetables will be practically the same as last year, the Wartime Prices and Trade Board announces, in issuing an order fixing maximum prices for the present season's production.

Slight changes are made in the ceilings on tomato juice to encourage canning of a high quality product.

Payment of subsidy by the Commodity Stabilization Corporation Limited will be continued this year on the same basis as in 1943.

SLINGSHOT-ROCKS BILL PAID AFTER 35 YEARS

Mobile, Ala., July 3—The Gulf, Mobile and Ohio Railroad frequently gets conscience letters, but its treasurer, G. M. White, says one he received from a Detroit man beats them all.

Mr. White said the man sent the railroad $3 to "pay for some rocks which I took from your right of way 35 years ago, for my slingshot."

INVASION MAKES MORE URGENT THE SAVING OF CIVILIAN GAS!

A Message to Canadian Motorists

THE invasion of Europe has thrown a vast and critical burden upon the petroleum resources of the United Nations.

In the first eight days of the campaign alone Allied aircraft flew 56,000 sorties. Many thousands of oil-burning warships and landing barges are shuttling ceaselessly across the Channel. Tanks, trucks, jeeps, mobile artillery, ambulances, by the thousands, are in action.

The driving power behind all this activity is petroleum—gasoline and fuels drawn from a dwindling crude oil supply. But—there is only so much oil. If existing supplies are to prove adequate, the most stringent economy of gasoline and fuel oil must be practised here at home.

Canada is able to produce only 15% of her own gas and oil needs. The remainder must be imported from the common pool of the United Nations and the bulk of this is shipped here by tankers. Critical manpower is needed to produce our gasoline and oil. Precious lives and precious ships must be risked to deliver it to our shores.

Invasions, and the difficulties of supply and transportation are not our only problems. Right here in Canada gas and oil are needed in enormous quantities for vital war purposes. The Commonwealth Air Training Plan has consumed as much as 548,000 gallons in a single day. Canada's Navy—expanded since war began from 15 ships to 650—consumes over 2,150,000 gallons every week. Army training, war plant operation, food production, essential trucking—all are huge consumers of gasoline and petroleum products.

Gasoline is ammunition—ammunition of which we have all too little. To waste a gallon of it is a crime against our fighting men.

LESS CIVILIAN GAS MEANS MORE "FIGHTING GAS" FOR THE FORCES

ELECTIONS ALL OVER—

THE ANNOUNCEMENT LAST week by Premier Manning that the government was calling a provincial election on August 8th did not come as a very great surprise. Naturally enough any party fortunate enough to find itself in the majority in any government will endeavor to arrange its appeal to the people at a time most advantageous to itself. The recent C.C.F. win in Saskatchewan no doubt stirred the Alberta government to action as regards an early election, there being no particular harm in this, most any other government, similarly situated, would have done the same thing. It is quite true that from the voters point of view the day could hardly be bettered, the weather should be good and it is "between seasons" as far as it is possible to define any day "between seasons" during the summer in Alberta. The coming election day here, either by accident or design is the same day upon which the Province of Quebec is also holding its election and this being so, there will be little opportunity for either province to profit by the result of the election in the other.

The main contestants here will be the Social Credit party and the Canadian Commonwealth Federation. At time of writing it would appear as if Social Credit is the more favored of the two, but one can never tell. The C.C.F.'s phenomenal gains in Saskatchewan and the trend toward social and economic reforms by the people generally could possibly result in an upset. There is one point perhaps which Albertans should understand and that is that the C.C.F. party in Saskatchewan did not appeal to the electorate on the broad principles of the party's previously stated program. Saskatchewan electors, according to experienced and impartial observers, did not vote for government control of business, for that phase during the campaign was not stressed, but rather the Saskatchewan C.C.F. based most of its appeal on provincial improvement. Another political phase which may have some bearing on the coming Alberta election is that here in Alberta we have had two political upsets already. First the liberals were swept out of power and replaced by the U.F.A., and then this party, in turn, was swept away politically by Social Credit, and it is possible the middle-aged Alberta voters may decide he or she has had all the political upsets they want. Saskatchewan, we believe, has been consistently liberal except for one Conservative term.

While there has been no official announcement of a federal election, Prime Minister McKenzie King has promised to go to the people before July 1st, 1945, and already unofficially, a dominion election campaign is gradually gaining force. In the Dominion political field, while it is early to start making appraisals, it would appear as if the struggle for power will be between the Liberals and the C.C.F. The Progressive-Conservative party under Mr. Bracken will make a bid for power, but with the exception of Ontario and perhaps a province in the Maritimes, its chances do not appear very bright. No doubt the present government's wartime policy as regards conscription for overseas service will be hotly contested. The Progressive Conservative party, having rejected this, and the government's decision to have no compulsory conscription for overseas service maintained, will raise an issue that may have far reaching consequences, it could upset all other logical reasoning. We believe the average Canadian, certainly the average Western Canadian, does not fully realize the import of this question. Persisted in, heated argument along these lines could well be the rock upon which Confederation could be smashed.

Present indications are that the West will poll heavily for the C.C.F. in the next Dominion election, Quebec will no doubt go liberal and the Progressive Conservatives will chiefly stake their hopes on Ontario. All in all, it is likely to be quite an interesting campaign.

A NEW M.D. OFFICE?—

A NEW OFFICE for the M.D. of Beaver is not likely to be built for some years to come. Even though the need is great, it is unlikely that any attempt will be made to erect one until after the war, certainly until such time as labor and materials are more readily available.

It could however, at this time be pointed out, that the present office, both as regards size and appointments, is inadequate, and sometime in the future, larger and more convenient quarters must be provided. The object of this writing is not so much to urge the erection of a new building, as it is to direct attention to the need and to suggest that now is the time to commence laying the financial foundation. A thousand dollars a year definitely laid aside for this purpose would, when the time came to build, come in very handy.

ROBOT BOMBS—

GENERAL ARNOLD REMARKS that the United States Army in speculating on the use of robot bombs had never considered anything less than thousands of them, used in concentrated force, as being of decisive effect. Our latest informal information is that the Germans are using them only at the average rate of something like one an hour.

The Russians have proposed a simple solution: capturing the Pas de Calais area whence the robots are flown. That solution must have its appeal for the Allied commanders.

ALBERTA TUBERCULOSIS ASSOCIATION REPORT OF ANNUAL MEETING

At the annual meeting of the Alberta Tuberculosis Association, held in Calgary on Sunday, June 25th, it was announced by President-elect R. W. Roscoe that 25,502 residents of Alberta had been X-rayed by the Association's mobile chest X-ray clinic under the direction of the department of health. 96 cases of probably active tuberculosis were found, most being in the early stages.

Present at the meeting were delegates from the eight Christmas Seal committees, and visitors included Dr. A. H. Baker, superintendent of Central Alberta Sanatorium, Dr. A. Somerville, director of the division of communicable diseases and Dr. G. R. Johnson, president of the Alberta Medical Association.

Dr. G. J. Wherrett, executive secretary of the Canadian Tuberculosis Association, addressed the gathering and commended the work being done by the association. He said the early diagnosis campaign was the agency by which tuberculosis would be eradicated. Dr. Wherrett congratulated the A.T.A. on the results of the Christmas Seal sale and announced that Alberta's percentage increase over 1942-43 was the highest in all Canada, being 72 per cent.

Dr. A. H. Baker gave tuberculosis statistics and said that the death-rate, which had begun to increase in the first three years of the war, was now declining. He said the department of health appreciated the work of the association in the early diagnosis of the disease, and spoke highly of the assistance given to patients through occupational therapy and vocational training.

Dr. A. Somerville attended the meeting as representative of Hon. Dr. W. W. Cross, Minister of Health, who regretted his inability to attend. Dr. Somerville brought a message of congratulation and thanks to the association from Dr. Cross. He said the rehabilitation of ex-patients was a most valuable work.

Reports of the president, secretary, treasurer and general secretary were approved. A message of sympathy and good wishes for recovery were sent to W. B. Way, president, whose attendance was prevented by illness.

Mr. Roscoe thanked the Rotary and Kinsmen Clubs for their efforts and paid tribute to the press and the radio for their considerable help. He said the Christmas Seal sale of 1943-44 raised over $45,000.00 and that $25,000.00 would be used to buy another mobile chest X-ray clinic which may be in operation by next Fall.

His Honour J. C. Bowen, lieutenant governor of Alberta was elected Honorary President, and Hon. Dr. W. W. Cross, Honorary Vice-President. The executive was enlarged to include the immediate Past President, in tribute to W. B. Way for his many years of devoted service. Other officers elected were R. W. Roscoe, Edmonton, president; T. L. Ferguson, Lethbridge, vice-president; E. H. Read, Drumheller, secretary; Eric Connelly, Calgary, treasurer. Directors are Geo. Eaton, Calgary and E. C. Shaughnessy, Edmonton.

BRITAIN'S PRAISE FOR CANADIAN EGGS

The following is an extract from a press report issued by the British Ministry of Food to the British people regarding the high quality of Canadian dried eggs used in Britain:

"If you ever sigh for a fresh egg as you reach for the familiar brown packet of dried eggs from Canada, bring this picture to your mind. In Canada there are several full-time egg-drying plants. In these there stand at long tables, rows of girls in immaculate white uniforms. The only thing these girls do is break eggs—real eggs such as you dream about. Before them are steel trays, each about the size of a bake-pan. Across the top of each tray is a metal bridge with a knife like edge. The girls break the eggs on the bridge and let the contents drop into a cup where they are examined.

"Then the broken egg passes through mixers, sieves, and clarifiers emerging from them as a smooth, yellowish liquid resembling rich cream. This liquid is poured into stainless steel storage vats maintained at a constant temperature of 40 degrees F. From here the liquid is pumped under pressure of 4,000 pounds per square inch through which a pin could not pass, and is blown in a fine spray into a large metal cone 50 feet high. On the opposite side, hot air is driven in. The moisture in the spray is immediately turned into steam and the substance drops to the bottom of the cone in the form of powder.

"So", continues the British Ministry to the British people, "next time you prepare an omelette or scrambled eggs from the well-known Canadian packet, don't think of it as some sort of egg substitute. Think back a bit to those girls in immaculate white who a short time before were relieving you of the effort of removing the shell from your eggs.

Canada sends to Britain about 50,000,000 dozen eggs every year.

Weekly Editor Looks At Ottawa

By JIM GREENBLAT

Just a brief scan of the Sixth Wartime Budget as brought down by Finance Minister Ilsley. Basic income tax rates are unchanged, but compulsory savings are off as of July 1st, while farmers benefit by the cutting off of existing tariffs and of the war exchange tax on farm machinery and implements. Income tax concessions include one which now exempts any child dependent on a taxpayer, whether his own or not. Medical expense deductions, now include those incurred outside of Canada. The prices Board also clears up a point with the warning that any reduction in laid down costs through this measure, on agricultural equipment and repairs, must be passed on to the consumer.

Weekly Consumer Branch item: Some Canadian mothers are finding that the 30 fluid ounces of corn syrup which they can get each month with their baby's preserves coupons is not enough for the baby's diet needs. The answer is that mothers can exchange the baby's sugar coupons at the Local Ration Board, receiving two preserve coupons for every sugar coupon.

When the final report was made of the House of Commons Sub-Committee on Post-war problems of Women, there was an interesting section on farm women and there were recommendations in regard to electrification of the farm home, farm housing, provision for a plentiful supply of running water, etc. One striking recommendation will be of interest to our rural readers. It listed a number of remunerative enterprises in agriculture, such as mushroom culture, dehydration of fruits and vegetables, boarding houses and other projects which might attract young women back to the farm. Where necessary it was recommended some sort of assistance be given to help establish young women in small enterprises.

Do you know that the total tonnage of Canadian coins struck by the Royal Mint in 1943 was 1,050 tons, four hundred more than the year before. Operating on a 24-hour a day schedule, seven days a week, they turned out 9,000,000 coins each week. The mint produced 500,000,000 coins in the past five years, of which 329,000,000 were one-centers. That's something to tell the kids and make their eyes pop.

Here's a very interesting survey of the tourist business as compiled by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. Last year foreign travellers spent $80,500,000 in Canada, of which all but two and a half million was by United States folks. Canadian travellers on the other hand went across the line and spent an estimated $31,700,000 last year, a considerable increase over the previous two years.

When Munitions Minister Howe told the House of Commons that there is no immediate prospect of gasoline curtailment, but if the invasion became a long, protracted struggle there might be, he had figures to back him up. He instanced that it takes two thousand gallons of fuel to move an armored division one mile; a fleet of 5,000 bombers and escort fighters raiding Germany uses up some 5,250,000 gallons of aviation gasoline. In one 30-day stretch the RCAF in Canada and Newfoundland used up an average of 548,000 gallons a day. Motor gasoline consumption in Canada from 1941 to 1944, including armed services, Alaska highway, agricultural uses and other war essentials totalled the staggering gallonage of 3,429,254,440.

Provision is made for seasonal price changes on July 16, December 1, and during the winter season.

CHICKEN CANNING TIME

Old hens make the best canning chicken, says Vera Macdonald, Supervisor of the Home Economics Branch. Tender young chickens when canned lose flavour and develop a stringy texture, but the old birds stand well the long processing and high temperatures. Chickens should never be cooked or allowed to stand in galvanized iron tubs or pails.

Cut chicken in usual serving portions leaving the skin on, or not, as desired. Trim off lumps of fat, keeping only enough for flavour. Too much fat in the jar may cook out onto the rubber ring and spoil the seal.

Chicken should be sorted into three piles:

(1) Meaty pieces such as breasts, thighs, legs and upper wing joints to can with or without bone, (with bone gives the best flavour)

(2) Bony pieces including backs, wings and necks. These are best if the meat is stripped from the bone, packed and covered with broth.

(3) Giblets should be kept separate since they discolour and flavour chicken. Livers should be canned alone and gizzards and hearts together.

Pre-cook meaty pieces, bony pieces and giblets separately. Place in boiling water, lower heat and simmer until the raw colour is nearly gone from the centre of the piece. This will take about ten minutes. Chicken to be canned without bone is simmered long enough so that the meat can be cut from the bone. Use one teaspoon of salt to a quart jar. Pack hot chicken in hot jars and pour over broth to cover the meat. Work out air bubbles. Process in pressure cooker at 15 pounds pressure for 75 minutes with bone or for two hours without bone. Giblets require 65 minutes for a pint jar or if hot water bath is used they should be processed for three and a half hours.

Mostly Routine Business At M.D. Beaver July Meeting

The July meeting of the M.D. of Beaver dealt chiefly with routine matters. Business going forward smoothly and with dispatch. The meeting was presided over by Deputy Reeve Ovens, Reeve Anderson being away from home on what we understand was very important personal business.

There were present: Deputy Reeve Ovens; Councillors Giebelhaus, Logan, Lucas, Moen and Swabey.

Minutes of the preceding meeting were adopted as read. Also monthly bank statement adopted.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

A number of old age pension cases were considered and recommendations made, mostly for full pension.

HOSPITAL ADMISSIONS

The hospital admissions were checked.

On the motion of Councillor Giebelhaus, Mr. Bruce was approved as representative on the Vegreville Provisional Hospital Board.

$2100.00 ADDITIONAL GOVT. GRANT

Council were notified that the government had made an additional road grant of $2100.00. This it will be remembered is on a 50-50 basis, the M.D. to spend a like amount on the particular road work done with the money. This brings the government road grant to $6100.00.

TURNED DOWN

Participation in an accident insurance proposition was [illegible] down.

On the motion of Councillor Giebelhaus the Reeve and Secretary were authorized to sign bonds.

ELECTRIC LINES

Letter from Dept. Public Works re electrical lines. On the motion of Councillor Moen the electrical company was given permission to construct lines on road allowances subject to the usual and specified conditions.

ROAD ALLOWANCE LEASE

Letter from Dept. of Public Works regarding application of Albert Hirsch, New Sarepta, to lease a road allowance and asking for Council's approval. On motion of Councillor Swabey this was tabled for investigation.

ROADWORK AGREEMENT TO [illegible]

Letter from M.D. of Eagle re road work agreement. In the division of assets of former M.D.'s when M.D. of Beaver was formed, Beaver obtained a large road building unit and agreed to construct so many miles of road for M.D. of Eagle. M.D. of Beaver would now prefer to pay cash but M.D. of Eagle wants original agreement carried out.

M.D. CONFERENCE

Letter from M.D. of Wainwright re conference of M.D. councillors and others interested to be held at Wainwright, Thursday, July 20. It was left to the discretion of the individual councillors as to whether they would attend.

COULDN'T DO IT

Letter from J. W. Curtis requesting Council to loan money for the purchase of a caterpillar tractor so that he could do work for the M.D. Council could not do this.

The by laws covering some land deals already reported were given their third reading.

QUARTER SOLD

Mr. Coxford wrote offering $350.00 for S.E. 12-47-18 W4. The offer was accepted and a by law covering it given its first and second reading.

WILL INVESTIGATE

Mr. Hans Hanson wrote offering $600.00 for three quarters of land. On motion of Councillor Swabey this was tabled for further investigation.

Mr. Miles Barrow wished to purchase N.E. 32-50-20 W4. On the motion of Councillor Ovens, Councillors Swabey and Lucas were appointed a committee to look at this land.

BY LAW RESCINDED

Mrs. S. Hanson recently purchased a lot in Poe, now she does not wish to retain it. On the motion of Councillor Logan, the by law authorizing the above sale was rescinded.

TO MEET COUNCIL

Mr. Chas. Lennoch who has a M.D. farm under lease wrote stating that he preferred a third crop share arrangement to the payment of $300. On the motion of Councillor Swabey the secretary was requested to write Mr. Lennoch and ask him to attend the next meeting of council. Carried.

COMMITTEE APPOINTED

Several letters from Mrs. K. Bracha regarding the sale of a quarter section to Mr. Keim. It appears that before the M.D. of Beaver was formed, a former M.D. gave Mrs. Bracha assurance that she would have first chance to buy this quarter. M.D. of Beaver, not knowing of this sold the quarter, subject to the Minister's approval, to Mr. Keim.

After considerable discussion it was decided that Councillors Giebelhaus and Logan investigate this and report back to Council. The Minister will also be informed of the necessary details.

ROAD PROBLEMS

Mrs. Heinig wrote re road condition near her farm. Council recognized the justice of Mrs. Heinig's request but labor is very hard to get. This will receive attention as soon as possible.

Mrs. Grummett wrote re road condition near her farm. Councillor Swabey will investigate this.

Adjourn for lunch.

WEED PROBLEM DISCUSSED

Mr. Harries, Weed Supervisor interviewed council regarding weed problems of the different lakeshores saying that some real progress had been made in combatting this menace. Grass seed had been distributed by the Department to those who had lakeshore land under lease and where any preparation at all had been made the catch was good. Mr. Harries cited some individual cases. Councillor Swabey remarked that there was still much to be done in this regard in his division. Mr. Harries went on to say there were no yearly leases of lakeshore property, only 10 and 20 year leases. The responsibility for weeds on this property is that of the lessee and in consequence becomes the problem of the M.D. weed inspector. The department would stand behind the weed inspector in any just action.

INTEREST REDUCED

Mr. E. Medine interviewed Council regarding interest upon the purchase price of land purchased from one of the former M.D.'s merger with Beaver. The land is rough and Council agreed that on a production basis, price was too high in the first place. On the motion of Councillor Moen, council agreed to cancel back interest and to make future interest on the purchase, three per cent.

HOLIDAYS WITH PAY

On the motion of Councillor Ovens, Mrs. O'Brien, stenographer, will be given two week's holiday with pay.

[illegible]

Applications from Chas. A. Nolan and C. W. Fodness under the Soldiers' Tax Exemption Act were granted.

FENCE PROBLEM

The question of part payment of some fencing dividing land recently sold by the M.D. from other land came up for consideration. On the motion of Councillor Logan, Mrs. Kjaring will be offered $30.00 without prejudice, for the half mile of fence.

WEED INSPECTORS APPOINTED

Mr. Albert Otte of Bruce was appointed weed inspector for division seven; Mr. Elmer Smith, Kingman for Division five; and Mr. Bill Severn, Vegreville for Division

Secretary announced that there is some weed killer on hand and that weed inspectors may have some.

$1.00 PER HOUR

On the motion of Councillor Logan the chargeable rate for the Letourneau carrymore between divisions will be set at $1.00 per hour.

EXPLANATION SATISFACTORY

Councillor Lucas requested information regarding work done by M.D. equipment in the Village of Holden. The work in question constituted only a few hours maintaining and the explanation given by Councillors Giebelhaus and Logan was quite satisfactory.

QUICK ACTION

Mr. Houston interviewed Council on behalf of Mr. Koloski, regarding condition of road. Mr. Koloski had been there for 10 years and had no road. Arrangements were made right there for work to be done.

TABLED

Mr. Morland wrote requesting damage for keeping sow before impounding it. The animal was finally impounded and sold. Council suggested that the original owner and Mr. Morland arrange some settlement and tabled the matter until next meeting.

ACCOUNTS PASSED

A number of accounts were presented and passed for payment.

OUT OF LUCK

Mr. Hulbert and Mr. Clements of Vegreville interviewed Council and requested a grant for the Vegreville fair. There were only three class B fairs in the province and Vegreville was the only one near the M.D. of Beaver. Council did not feel they were able to give a grant to this project.

COURT OF REVISION

The Court of Revision will be held at next meeting of Council on Friday, August 25th at Ryley.

Meeting adjourned.

WEDDING

The Tofield United Church, beautifully decorated with summer flowers and fern, was the scene of the wedding ceremony, Saturday, July 15th, of Miss Eunice Wiltzen, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Wiltzen of Tofield, and Sig. David Webber, R.C.N.V.R., eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. S. Webber of Edmonton. Rev. D. K. Allan officiated.

To the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march played by Miss Corrine Haukedahl, the bride entered the church on the arm of her father carrying an arm bouquet of roses. She wore a floor length gown of white brocaded satin, styled with a sweetheart neckline, a full skirt gathered onto a v-shaped bodice and long sleeves tapering to points above the wrists. Her three quarter length veil was caught with a sweetheart crown. A single strand of pearls completed her ensemble.

Miss Joyce Wiltzen, sister of the bride, was her only attendant, wearing a floor length model in blue sheer, styled with long sleeves and a full skirt gathered onto the bodice. A chapel veil caught with a band of blue roses was worn on her head. She carried an arm bouquet of pink carnations. Mr. Harold Huchins of Edmonton supported the groom.

The bride's mother wore a navy blue two piece dress with navy blue accessories and wore a corsage of roses. The groom's mother chose a light blue dress with light blue accessories and wore a corsage of pink roses. During the signing of the register, Miss Beulah Hillerud sang "Because."

Following the ceremony a small reception was held at the home of the bride's parents. The bride's table was centred with a three-tiered wedding cake set in pink tulle and flanked on either side by tall white tapers. Rev. Allan proposed the toast to the bride.

The bride and groom left for a trip to Banff and Jasper. For travelling the bride chose a teal blue suit with chocolate brown accessories.

CHAPTER XI

SYNOPSIS

Released from prison after serving fifteen years for a murder he didn't commit Mark Grant goes to the office of a lawyer named Fosdick to collect a legacy left to him while he was in prison. When Fosdick tells him he will have to wait, Mark accepts an invitation to a party to help Teddy Banks win a bet with Archie Landon. Although Mark tells them his real name Archie introduces him as "Stewart Byram." At the party Mark meets Burleson, the man who sent him to prison, and Burleson's niece, Pamela Rodney. Burleson does not recognize him, and Mark decides not to reveal his identity to Pam until he finds the real murderer. Fosdick learns of his deception. Pam asks Burleson to give her his little jade god and is surprised when he angrily refuses and tells her he is going to smash it before he dies. When Teddy Banks learns Mark's identity from Fosdick he tells Archie Landon. Jealous of Mark's attentions to Pam, goes to Mark's room but Mark is not there. Landon then hails a taxi, directing the driver to Burleson's address. Meanwhile, Mark is at Burleson's with Pam. He tells her about the wager and confesses that he has been in prison. Suddenly he sees a familiar object—a little jade god. Pam tells him it is Burleson's and promises to help him when he tells her the jade god is important to him, but her faith in him is shaken when Landon arrives and tells her Mark killed his uncle for money. Burleson recognizes Mark and realizes the significance of the jade god. In a fury he smashes the jade piece.

"You—" Mark began to speak to him, but he stopped short. It was not worth while here. Burleson was right! He turned and walked into the hall.

It was a large hall, dim after the manner of big city houses; the only light in it was reflected on the white marble tiles of the tesselated floor, and the glimmer of a polished balustrade, where the wide staircase ascended. In an alcove-room behind the staircase, a shaded lamp burned. Mark's first feeling was a consuming rage at Landon.

"The sneak!" he thought, and then, of Burleson: "He could have saved me!"

He would not think of Pam; that was over! It was like so many things in his life—he had been swept away by adverse current.

"That's over!" he thought bitterly, making his way toward the door.

He was new in the house and, for a moment, he did not find it. He found instead the alcove room, the green glow of the shaded lamp, the piled cushions in the corner under stairs.

"They'll accuse me of wanting to rob them next!" he muttered angrily and turned. He was in sight of the entrance now.

Then someone called his name.

"Mark—Mark Grant!"

It was her voice and he stood still. The blood rushed back to his heart again and set it racing. She—

He was an ex-convict, he knew it; he steadied himself, he did not even hold out his hand when she ran to him. It was so dim in the hall he could not see her face clearly, but he felt the tremor of her hands on his arm.

"Don't go—" she almost sobbed, caught herself and tried to speak firmly—"until I tell you—"

He bent his head, looking down at her.

"What can you tell me now?"

"That I'm still your friend!"

"How can you? You heard your uncle—it's true, too, the accusation and the sentence were—what they say."

"I know!" her voice broke. "Come in here—" she motioned to the alcove room. "I—I must ask you—"

He went with her, chiefly because he wanted to see her face again in the lamplight. It looked, he thought, like a white flower lifted sweetly to the sun.

"The jade god—tell me about it," she said quickly. "It means something—it meant something to you?"

"It meant everything. My uncle was a collector of curiosities; it was his fad—he was rich." Mark wet his dry lips. "They thought I coveted his money, but I didn't. I could work. He was odd, crabbed and quarrelsome, but he was never unkind to me—we got on. I was with him that last day when he bought that jade god. It was in his pocket when I left him; somehow I never thought of it then as a thing that might clear me! He said he was going to give it to Mr. Burleson. I remember that now; your uncle was his friend and business associate, and, as you know, a collector too. Your uncle has it, it must have been given to him after I left my uncle—before the murder—don't you see the point? That little thing would have made my alibi complete. Your uncle testified against me and he stood so high, even then, that a word from him—" Mark's gesture expressed all the hopeless futility of his young [illegible] to save himself.

"If Uncle Herbert knew—oh, I'm sure he would have said!" Pam exclaimed. "He's a violent tempered man, he's queer, but he's just; I think he didn't know."

"It's certain he won't tell now; I saw that in his face—when he smashed that green god."

"Oh, I can't think he knew!" she persisted.

Mark did not answer this; he stood looking at her silently. Like everything else in his life this was to end. But he wanted to remember her as she stood there. She looked so young and brave! She was brave to call herself his friend.

Even in the puzzle of her thoughts of her uncle she felt his eyes, they drew hers, she looked up like a child, tears misting, lips tremulous.

"Oh," she gasped, "I hated Landon—the coward!"

He smiled. Her hot tone championed him; she was his friend.

"You know everything now," he said gently. "I was going to tell you all but I couldn't—it's not true; you believe that?"

She nodded, speechless.

"It will never be cleared up, I'm afraid. There's only one thing to do. I've got to make a new life and a new name for myself. I'm going out west, as they say. I don't know how far—as far as I can, I fancy. I'd like to feel free, to draw long breaths of freedom. I've had fifteen years of—the other thing!"

"Oh, it's cruel!" she murmured; in the lamplight her eyes looked dark in her pale face.

He could not go; he stood looking down at her, not touching her—he must go away and never see her again, for he was sure that he would never be cleared. She was like a child, like a white flower, he thought again. If a fierce wind blew on her it would break her; yet there was something strong about her too.

"I've got to go," he whispered at last.

She nodded, looking down, her lips drawn close together.

He drew his breath hard. "If I'd only come here like other men!" he groaned.

She smiled. "You couldn't," she said softly, "for you're not like anyone but yourself. I—you believe me don't you, when I say I trust you? I know you're innocent."

"Pam, I love you!" he answered passionately. "There! I never meant to say it; I've no right to say it, but I've got to; I loved you that first day—you know it?"

She lifted her head at that. "I know!" she said softly, "I knew then."

He caught her in his arms and held her close. "If I wasn't innocent of that charge I couldn't touch you," he said, "I've no right to do it now, for I must go away. I didn't mean to tell you, but I'm beaten, I can't go without it. I've got this to remember when I'm alone—way off somewhere—trying to make good!"

She looked up, touching his shoulders with her strong little hands. "You're not going alone, Mark. I'm going with you."

"You?" he gasped, the wild joy of it set his heart beating in his throat. To take her with him—his wife? "Good God, Pam, I wish I could—I wish I could marry you today and carry you off!"

She clung to him, sobbing. "I'll go—tomorrow, if you're going," she said, "I'll show them that I believe in you!"

"Oh, you angel! You'd ruin your life, marry an ex-convict—just to show your faith in him?"

"Just because I love him!" Pam said bravely. "Oh, Mark, I was so miserable just now—I'll be happy battling for you!"

He took her hands gently from his neck and held them both in his, looking at her with haggard eyes.

"Because I love you so much I can't let you do it, Pam. I'd be a coward to let you do it!"

"Why? I've a right to marry anyone I please!" She was a gallant little thing, ready to battle for him.

"No," he said gently, "not a convict! You don't know what it would be. We couldn't keep that record back. It'll follow me—look at Landon."

"Oh, Landon!" she cried contemptuously.

"There are many Landons. They'll point at me. I've got to face that, but I'd never ask the woman I love to face it. Pam, you'd be brave at first but it would break you. Oh, I know! They'll call me a murderer, they'll talk of it. Because I adore you, I won't make you bear that; an ex-convict's wife, a man who isn't cleared, it would wear you down, break your heart!"

"I'm not afraid!" she sobbed, clinging to him, "I mean it—I'll go!"

[illegible]

"It's goodbye," he said firmly. "I won't take you. At least, I'm man enough not to ruin your life—because I love you. It's good-bye, Pam!"

She could not speak, she let him go, but she stood still, tears blinding her. He would not take her to fight his battle, there was a tumult in her heart, she wanted to run after him to tell him she would face anything for him, but he didn't want her to go! The hot blood rushed to her face, then she remembered the anguish in his eyes—and he was going! She stood, holding her breath, listening to his footsteps going away down the long hall and, at last, the closing of the door.

The closing of that door left her helpless; there was apparently nothing more that she could do. She had offered to go the whole length for him, to share his disgrace and fight his battles. It was the one thing that love could do, she thought, and he had refused it! It was incredible that he could refuse it, but he had.

She sank down on the cushioned bench in the alcove and buried her head in her hands. There was nothing to do now but to be miserable! She tried to resent his going without her, but she could not; she had had seen his face, and she dimly understood the things he would have to meet—a man who had served a prison term for murder, who could not clear himself. If she had been a man she would not have let a woman share it! So that was that.

She lifted her face from her clenched hands and tried to wink back the tears. If there was something that she could do, wasn't there something? Suddenly her heart leaped—the jade god! She would make Burleson tell her everything he knew. She rose weakly, pushing her short soft hair out of her eyes; then suddenly, she laughed hysterically; the idea of making Uncle Herbert do anything! She remembered that terrible red streak that came between his eyes when he was angry; she would hate to be the cause of it; Aunt Lynn always declared he was on the point of having a fit! But Mark mattered more than Burleson's anger.

She went softly across the hall. She wanted to be sure that Landon had gone before she went back to the library. Mysteriously, as it seemed lights sprang up on the staircase from unseen switches. There was a stir in the rooms beyond and then Aunt Lynn's voice cold and crisp, freezing someone out. Pam hid herself from them, trying to slip by, but she could not shut her ears.

"I'm sorry, I knew your mother, Archie," Mrs. Lynn said icily, "but I can't pardon this."

She was freezing Landon out!

He mumbled something about Teddy Banks, and not being himself.

"If you mean you'd been drinking—that only makes it worse," she replied sharply. "As for Banks—you know what I think! I told the servants long ago not to admit him again."

"And now I'm in for that, too, I suppose!" Landon cried. "When I tried to undo it, too."

"You'll have to pardon a woman who knew your mother, for speaking the truth, Archie," she retorted suavely. "You see, I'm not sure that your way of undoing it was—much better!"

He stammered more apologies and her icy voice trickled back at him.

"He's done!" Pam thought. "And I'm glad of it—the coward!"

A WOLF CUB HERO

Richard Kingsbury, 10 year old British Wolf Cub, has been presented with the Scout V.C., the Cornwell Decoration, by Queen Mother Mary. Richard was badly injured when a plane crashed on his school playing fields. Although suffering great pain from a fractured knee-cap, he refused medical attention until those more dangerously injured had been attended. For weeks, in hospital, he continued to study his Wolf Cub badge work.

USED BOY SCOUT FIRST AID

Flying Officer George E. Pridham, who was recently repatriated from a German prisoner-of-war camp, told this story on his return to his home in Toronto. "I came down in a pasture 11 miles from Amsterdam. I had left my leg in the gun turret. I knew I would bleed to death unless I attended to the wound. I had no first aid equipment but I had once been a Boy Scout. I tore strips from the parachute and applied a tourniquet, and I used other strips for bandages." Undoubtedly his Boy Scout first aid experience saved his life.

EDMONTONS AS DECOYS

By Sgt. R. J. Daly, Staff Writer, The Maple Leaf

(Enclosed in a letter to his folks by Gnr. A. G. Eagleshem, who is with the Edmonton Regiment in Italy).

It is said of the coyote—to live in peace does not suit him. He likes living among his enemies, matching wits with them, feasting on the fruits of carefully baited traps. This story is of men of the Loyal Edmonton Regiment whose fathers selected the wily coyote as a mascot in 1914. It is a present-day story illustrating the aptness of the adoption.

As the great Allied offensive which resulted in the occupation of Rome, began to take shape, it was expected that the Edmontons, based on their courageous victory at San Leonardo (Vino Ridge) and their successful day and night assault on Ortona, would be given a part worthy of their prowess. And indeed they were assigned the task of acting as decoys and forward "baits", they enticed upon themselves enemy attention, in order that others could go victoriously around the Nazi flank.

If it is a source of glory to offer itself as a human target, spearheading an advance into an overmobile wall of fire, then the Edmontons added polish to the lustrous badge of honor they already wore. Through the mine-fields, pill-boxes and entrenchments of the Hitler line, into the valleys of carefully concealed death and over the mountainous bastions of heart-breaking strength before Ceprano and Frosinone they went. Always one of the most forward elements of the whole Eighth Army, they pushed on till they had [illegible] bed and taken their final objective, the seemingly impassable Mt. Radicino guardian feature of Ferentino.

The War Diary of the Loyal Edmontons has grown thick since that night on which the first wave smashed against the formidable Hitler Line break-water. It was in this initial action that men like Sgt. G. A. Campion, M.M., Tofield, Alta., and Sgt. "Smokey" Atkinson, Fox Creek, B. C., inscribed their names indelibly on the regimental honor rolls, and set the example that carried their comrades through to the capture of Mt. Radicino.

(Editors Note: The writer then goes on to describe many heroic deeds of Edmonton men.)

THE SONG SPARROW

Gentle songster of the milder key,
Thy roofless home is hid we know not where.
When louder voices rest on field or tree
Thy sweet responses steal on summer air.

True migrant thou, when drowsy Autumn yields
To chill and sleep, and fairer skies allure,
Thy fragile wing flits o'er the stubble fields,
A hidden hand directs thy pathway sure.

When mortal shadows dim the nearer scene,
And feeble fingers touch the earthly lyre,
May grace Divine the staff on which we lean,
The inward joy of faith and love inspire.

OTTAWA NOT TO RELEASE DRAFT ARMY

Ottawa—The Federal Government will not release the 73,000 draftees in the Canadian Army as demanded in the Progressive Conservative budget amendment. As long as there is a chance that they may be needed for overseas reinforcements they will be kept in the service, Hon. J. L. Ralston, Minister of National Defence, told the House of Commons.

In the past six months, Col. Ralston said, the army has discharged about 30,000 men medically unfit for overseas service for work on farms and in factories. Of these 7,000 were draftees.

Most of the draftees are performing necessary military service on the Pacific and Atlantic coasts and in Newfoundland, Labrador, Bermuda and Jamaica, Col. Ralston revealed. They are thus performing duties which would otherwise keep the same numbers of volunteers from going overseas.

Draftees will be sent Overseas if needed

More than 25,000 volunteers have been accepted into the army in the past six months, 1000 more than the needed quota for reinforcements, the Defence Minister stated. With a big pool of reserves in Britain and 30,000 in Canada, besides 50,000 draftees available if necessary, Canada has sufficient reinforcements for all expected demands until next year, Col. Ralston said.

If casualties are unexpectedly high, or fighting demands on the army unexpectedly increased, draftees will be sent overseas if they are needed, he asserted. The overseas reinforcement system is working splendidly and field commanders both in France and Italy have expressed their satisfaction with quick renewal of troops, the Minister said.

SOME INCREASES IN FRUIT PRODUCTION

The first estimate of fruit production in Canada in 1944 indicates that the apple crop at 15,580,000 bushels will be 21 per cent larger than the 1943 harvest of 12,892,000 bushels, and 14 per cent higher than the ten-year 1934-43 average of 13,622,900 bushels.

A 19 per cent reduction is now expected in the crop of pears which is estimated at 517,000 bushels as compared with 636,000 bushels a year ago. Compared with the ten-year 1934-43 average of 607,100 bushels, the reduction will be 15 per cent.

The first estimate of plum and prune crops is only slightly below the 1943 crop of 363,300 bushels. Placed at 348,500 bushels the 1944 crop is 12 per cent larger than the ten-year average of 311,900 bushels.

Peach production estimated at 1,138,400 bushels is expected to show an 80 per cent increase over the very poor crop of 1943 at 633,000 bushels. The ten-year average is 1,134,400 bushels.

Apricots this year are expected to show a substantial increase from 24,900 bushels in 1943. The first estimate of the 1944 crop is placed at 116,500 bushels, which is 81 per cent greater than the ten-year average of 64,200 bushels.

The 1944 strawberry crop at 9,637,300 quarts is estimated to be 40 per cent below the 1943 harvest of 16,082,400 quarts. The ten-year average is 22,475,800 quarts.

Raspberries at 8,432,100 quarts is below the 9,521,300 quarts of 1943 and 8 per cent below the ten-year average of 9,156,000 quarts.

An increase of 6 per cent is estimated for the grape harvest of 57,683,300 pounds which will be 16 per cent above the ten-year average of 49,130,400 pounds. Loganberries at 1,278,000 pounds are expected to be 3 per cent less than last year and are well below the ten-year average of 1,582,700 pounds.

The outlook for vegetables all over Canada is satisfactory with an overall substantial increase. In the four major canning crops, the increases are: peas, 15 per cent; beans, 10 per cent; corn, 12 per cent, and tomatoes 24 per cent.

LAKESHORES AND WEEDS—

A PROBLEM THAT has come up recurrently over a period of years is the lakeshore area weed problem. The former M.D. of Cornhill council tackled this several years in succession and at the time did not appear to be making much headway, but apparently its endeavors and interest has finally produced results.

There are in the province of Alberta, parcels of land which are known as lakeshore areas. This land of which there is a considerable amount within the M.D. of Beaver is crown land and comes under the management of the Department of Lands and Mines, Edmonton. For many years now these lands have been a source of worry as regards weed infestation, Canada thistle and even sow thistle finding a ready growing place on them. When during ordinary weed inspection, farmers close to these areas would be requested to clean certain portions of their farm, they would reply that it was useless to do so when weed seeds would immediately blow in from lakeshore areas. The situation was aggravated by the fact that governmentally the weed situation was a responsibility of the Department of Agriculture and the lakeshore areas come under the jurisdiction of the Department of Lands and Mines and there was not always as much co-operation between the two departments as some of the delegations going to Edmonton on the weed problem desired.

However, it would now appear that as far as the Department of Agriculture is concerned the problem of weed infested lakeshore areas is being effectively tackled. It should be explained here that it is the policy of the Dept. of Lands and Mines to lease these areas to ranchers or farmers on a ten or twenty year lease. Thus upon leased land the responsibility as regards weed infestation is clearly that of the lessee. Working on this basis the Department of Agriculture has provided some individuals with grass seed to be planted on lakshore areas with the expectation that where there is a good growth of grass the weeds will be crowded out. In some areas around Beaver Lake this has been very successfully done. In this respect and as far as it has gone, the Department of Agriculture is to be commended for its efforts to solve a long standing and aggravating problem.

But while no doubt it is true that there is nothing less than a ten year lease for lakeshore areas and the responsibility of weed control rests squarely on the lessee, it must be equally true that all lakeshore areas are not under lease and that a part at least must be still controlled by the Department of Lands and Mines. We wonder if this Department and the Department of Agriculture have co-operated in the matter of planting grass seed and if not, whether it has ever been considered. Weed seeds are no respecters of property and are just as likely to light and germinate on Department controlled land as privately controlled land, and by the same token wind will scatter seeds from crown land as willingly as from privately owned lands. The problem is not easy even for a government department, but having made a good start as regards leased lands, effort along the same lines directed toward government controlled land, should at least be productive of an equal amount of good.

ROAD GRANT INCREASED—

IT WAS GRATIFYING to hear that the government had increased the M.D. of Beaver's road grant from $6000.00 to $8,100.00. The problem now is to make good use of the money. Up to the present, this summer, road work has been quite a headache, what with the abnormally wet season, shortage of labor and difficulty in procuring repairs, councillors responsible have had their hands full. This grant money which is given on a 50-50 basis, has to be spent on roads approved by the Department.

TEACHERS AND GOOD WILL—

ONE AMERICAN WHO had been long at home in South America had an interesting observation to make on this matter of good will among nations. She said: "The best harbingers of good will down there have been our schoolteachers on vacation. They understood the countries they visited, they had little money to throw away, and they were eager to learn all they could."—Harold Lamb in the Los Angeles Times.

There are quite a few sow thistle plants in full bloom in town. These should be cut at once as each day brings the seeds closer to potential germination.

U.S. Spoils 'Ghost Gun' Sale

Washington, July 6—In a tale of "sheer fantasy" the State Department reported today that a group of American traders has been trying for three years to sell various allied nations a million U.S. Army rifles that do not exist and a billion rounds of .30 caliber ammunition—also imaginary.

Officials finally decided to make the story public because they were fed up with the "extremely difficult situations" they say were created between the United States Government and almost every allied government by the sales activities.

The information, therefore, came out in the official Department of State Bulletin in an article by James M. Ludlow, an official of the Department's munitions control unit.

None of the "promoters", as Mr. Ludlow calls the peddlers of the ghost guns, is named and none has ever succeeded in actually making a sale. Both the State and Justice Departments have tried vainly, it was said, to have the activities stopped. Here, says Mr. Ludlow's account, is what happened:

After the war started in Europe the War Department announced it had a "quantity of rifles" to sell to friendly governments for approximately $12.50 a gun.

"One of the persons who saw the letter apparently decided that by finding a purchaser for the Government he could earn some easy money.

"He promised commissions to individuals who would help him; these persons in turn appointed their own agents."

Meanwhile, the War Department shipped the rifles off to Britain to arm the country after Dunkerque. There were hardly enough guns left in this country to train America's own forces with. But this, according to Mr. Ludlow, did not slow down the mushrooming sales plan, which today is still going strong.

In fact, Mr. Ludlow says as the number of would-be salesmen grew the price per nonexistent rifle grew until it soared from the War Department's original $12.50 to the prevalent $70.50.

"Of course, in fairness to the latter price," he said, "it must be pointed out that somewhere along the line the one billion cartridges were added, apparently to make the transaction more attractive."

Mr. Ludlow says the "promoters" offer the rifles to the purchasing missions of foreign governments complete with bayonet, scabbard and sling and 1,000 rounds of cartridges per gun. The proposition, made to "nearly every foreign mission and purchasing commission in this country" also included, Mr. Ludlow reports, a guarantee of export licenses and delivery within 48 hours.

POST-WAR AND THE FARMER SAVING AND PLANNING BIG NEED NOW

By G. H. Martinson

(Note: This is the first of a series of comments by well-known prairie authorities, written expressly for the Weekly Press of Western Canada.)

Foresighted farmers over the Dominion are trying to figure out whether their voluntary and involuntary savings in war years will serve them adequately through the period of uncertainty in the initial post-war years.

A summary of the views of a fair sample of prairie farmers, given necessary protection, believe this to be the case. They cite the retention of price ceilings on consumer goods and a cushion or shock-absorber through the maintenance of adequate floor prices as necessary protection to enable them to secure a fair share of the national income.

Farm income is at a higher level than ever before. A very large number of farmers are now able to pay income tax; farm mortgage indebtedness is at its lowest level in decades and inflation has been bridled to a far greater degree than even the most optimistic ever anticipated.

Admittedly farmers' savings are largely due to the inability to obtain normal replacements, repairs, etc. No one can suggest that all surplus money held by farmers today is profit. A good share must be classed as replacement and depreciation reserves. Many of the farmers requirements will be urgent necessities as soon as the war ends and supplies are made available. However, this should not suggest a rush to purchase on an unprecedented scale. Those who plan to cover their replacements and other needs over a period of three to five years after the war ends, will undoubtedly benefit from more favorable cost prices through the increased production of the things they must buy.

Planned and systematic buying over a period of years after the war ends, will undoubtedly benefit from more favorable cost prices through the increased production of the things they must buy.

Planned and systematic buying over a period of years after the war ends will alleviate any unexpected inconveniences and depression periods that may occur. The producer who enters into a buying spree as soon as the opportunity presents itself, partly through necessity and also to completely eliminate the enforced inconveniences of years will find himself in a very vulnerable position in the event of any adverse conditions arising in the post-war period.

Western agriculture is on a sounder financial basis today than for many years. The gross income from farm products is at an all-time high, and is supplemented by other revenues, including payments on wheat participation certificates covering the past three crop years and totalling almost $60,000,000 wheat acreage reduction payments, etc.

There are indications that the price of farm lands in Western Canada are increasing. Yet, the farmer who has made definite plans for the future is making a cautious study of farm land prices. First, he is asking himself—do I need more land? Secondly, will this additional acreage over a period of years, return sufficient income to support my family and meet payments on the present purchase prices? Thirdly, will the post-war demand for farm products justify this expenditure?

The producer who is planning definitely for the future is listing his financial musts in the order that they can be most conveniently obtained. He is planning to guard against the various hazards encountered in farming and realizes that the Western farm economy in the past never permitted him to practice soil conservation. He is looking to the security of his family and providing financial independence in his declining years.

Through saving now and by careful planning for the future he sees the possibility of brighter prospects of remaining on a sound financial basis than for many years. The possibility of securing some of the modern conveniences of life that in the past have been out of his reach, is seen in the offing.

Many men and women, well past middle age, who are carrying on a wartime job in agriculture today are anxious to retire when the war ends and will have to depend largely on their savings from income in war years. Others are approaching that stage, and thousands now in the armed forces and war industries will seek rehabilitation in the agricultural industry.

The larger the amount of surplus money that can be cleaned by the individual farmer as savings in connection with a long range post-war financial program strengthens his own security, and, in addition, provides for a greater distribution of employment for the benefit of all.

SHOWER

Miss Joan Kellner was guest of honor at a delightful shower on Tuesday, at the J. R. Francis home. In spite of muddy roads a large number of women from town and country gathered to express best wishes to this former Tofield girl whose marriage is to take place in the near future. The gifts, which were numerous and useful, were arranged in a large basket, beautifully decorated in white and pale green with three silver bells suspended from the handle. Of special interest was the lovely wedding cake, made and decorated by Mrs. A. Lee.

Miss Kellner, who took her public and high school in Tofield, later graduated as a nurse from the University Hospital in Edmonton. Since graduating she has been on the staff of hospitals in Ponoka, Claresholm, Grande Prairie and Cadomin in Alberta, and Toronto, Ontario. At present she is District Nurse in the Ft. Assiniboine area.

M. J. Coldwell M.P., National Leader Of The C.C.F. Addresses Picnic

Introduced by Mr. Elmer E. Roper M.L.A., provincial leader of the C.C.F. party, M. J. Coldwell, M.P., National leader, last Saturday addressed the annual picnic of the Clover Bar constituency. Speaking of the C.C.F. as the coming political movement in Canada, Mr. Coldwell said: "We must preserve our unity all across Canada. No one province can go forward of itself alone." In speaking to the large gathering, which represented the constituency fairly generally, Mr. Coldwell stressed the agricultural industry, with the interests of which he has been closely associated. Much depends on this industry, he stressed, not only in Canada, but throughout the world. Pointing out the recent reports that only 1-3 of the population of Canada was in prewar days adequately fed, and that 44 per cent of all the young men who volunteered for active service in Canada were rejected as medically unfit. The speaker said, "You cannot have peace and prosperity in a world that is half-fed."

The speaker intimated that he felt that the reason for this condition is that the great resources of this country have been allowed to come under the control of a few people, who have amassed great fortunes thereby. The goods that the people require must be brought more directly under the public ownership, he said. This country has been, and is, dominated by powers opposed to the general welfare of the people.

Mr Coldwell indicated a better attitude in respect to Canadian agricultural products prevailing in Great Britain than before the war. There is the realization that Britain cannot prosper unless agriculture in other parts of the world prosper, since Great Britain needs markets for her own goods. The recent agreement between Canada and Great Britain whereby Canada is to supply one billion pounds of beef in the next two years, shows the pattern which future trade relations will take. The speaker stressed, however, that the indications are that such agreements will be made either by Britain, or by traders or government authorities in this country, while the actual producers will not be represented. The alternative would be representative co-operatives.

The program of the C.C.F. Mr. Coldwell said, is "a democratic, people's program." Their aim is to encourage co-operatives, and he pointed out the new cabinet post in the Saskatchewan Government, under a Minister of Co-operatives.

The picnic also included a meeting of the Constituency Board of Directors in the morning, while there was the annual convention of the Association, financial report and election of officers in the afternoon. Those elected were: President, Mr. S. Ricketts; Vice-pres., Mr. G. Meyer; Secretary, Mr. C. Untershultz; and twelve directors. Other speakers in the afternoon were Miss Mary Crawford and Elmer E. Roper.

More than forty ladies of Ketchamoot, Lindbrook, Tofield and Lakeshore gathered at the Lindbrook hall on Wednesday afternoon, July 12, to welcome a new neighbor, Mrs. Clifford Appleby, into the district.

The hall was tastefully decorated with pink and white streamers and centred with a table piled high with gifts.

Arranged on the walls were pictures, supposedly portraying the childhood, courtship and marriage, and even the future, of the young couple.

Mrs. Wm. Davison presented the gifts. Mrs. Appleby very graciously thanked the ladies for honoring her. Misses Joyce Bailey, Alice Bailey, Doreen Brown, Lylia Bailey, and Jean Torrie assisted with the opening of the parcels and serving lunch.

Hostesses were: Mrs. Smith, Mrs. H. McGinitie, Mrs. Davison and Mrs. Torrie.

THE JADE GOD

By Mary Imlay Taylor

CHAPTER XII

SYNOPSIS

Released from prison after serving fifteen years for a murder he didn't commit, Mark Grant goes to the office of a lawyer named Fosdick to collect a legacy left to him while he was in prison. When Fosdick tells him he will have to wait, Mark accepts an invitation to a party to help Teddy Banks win a bet with Archie Landon. Although Mark tells them his real name, Archie introduces him as "Stewart Byram." At the party Mark meets Burleson, the man who sent him to prison, and Burleson's niece, Pamela Rodney Burleson does not recognize him, and Mark decides not to reveal his identity to Pam until he finds the real murderer. Fosdick learns of his deception. Pam asks Burleson to give her his little jade god and is surprised when he angrily refuses and tells her he is going to smash it before he dies. When Teddy Banks learns Mark's identity from Fosdick he tells Archie Landon, jealous of Mark's attentions to Pam, goes to Mark's room but Mark is not there. Landon then hails a taxi, directing the driver to Burleson's address. Meanwhile, Mark is at Burleson's with Pam. He tells her about the wager and confesses that he has been in prison. Suddenly he sees a familiar object---a little jade god. Pam tells him it is Burleson's and promises to help him when he tells her the jade god is important to him, but her faith in him is shaken when Landon arrives and tells her Mark killed his uncle for money. Burleson recognizes Mark and realizes the significance of the jade god. In a fury he smashes the jade piece. Mark tells Pam that, since Burleson has the jade god he must have been with his uncle after Mark left him. His testimony would prove that the murdered man was alive when Mark left him. After Mark leaves, Pam goes back to the library.

Then Pam slipped past that curtained arch and found the little door in the corner; it opened into the library beside the fireplace. It was still in there; her first thought was that there was no one in the room: the shades had not been drawn; a street-lamp flared garishly outside, the fire on the hearth was low---she had a sudden consciousness of the flowers on her tea table---gardenias, overwhelmingly sweet---"the flowers of the sweethearts" Mexicans call them. Then, beyond the shaded lamp, she saw the outline of her uncle's gray head. She thought he was asleep, his eyes were closed, the red streak had faded into ashen gray, he looked ill. It seemed impossible that he could be asleep after all that violence! She saw the scattered bits of polished jade on the floor, shattered like poor Mark's hope of freedom long ago.

She stooped softly and began to pick up the fragments. She found the head unhurt, green beard and all, and the distorted mouth grinned up at her. She had it in her hand when she lifted her eyes again and found Burleson watching her.

"Throw that thing away, Pam!" he said sharply.

But she did not; she came nearer, holding out her pink palm with the green head in it.

"Uncle Herbert, Mark's uncle bought that when they were together for the last time; bought it for you, and he had it when Mark saw him last. He gave it to you afterwards," she paused, letting her words sink in, but he said nothing, only looked intently at her.

"Don't you see?" she pleaded, "he gave it to you after Mark left him. He was killed after that. You can clear Mark, if you will!"

"Oh, can I?" his gray lined face was cruel when he twisted his lips like that!

The girl looked steadily at him with the eyes of youth. "Yes, you can! You must---" She came nearer. "Uncle Herbert, try to remember---you must! He can't be left like this---he didn't do it!"

Burleson returned her look steadily, his grayness seemed to increase, for the tempest of his anger had left him weak.

"Why are you so sure he didn't do it?" he asked raspingly. She broke at that, suddenly childish and forlorn. "I know---I love him!"

He was dumbfounded. "Extraordinary!" he said, after a moment. "You young girls now---good Lord, what would your grandmothers have said?"

"Who cares?" Pam stormed. "We're young---youth has a right to live!"

"And age has to clear out, eh?" his face twisted again into his mocking smile.

"If it stands in the way of life---yes!" she cried cruelly. "Think of all Mark's lost---fifteen years of youth! It's cruel, it's wicked. Uncle Herbert, you must have known something, there was someone else; why didn't you say so?"

He considered her, his head sunk between his thin high shoulders. She was so splendidly young and so cruel in her youth.

"Suppose I suspected," he said slowly. "Suppose I didn't know, but if I'd said a word it would have pulled down a family, a good wife, sons or daughters, and proved nothing---perhaps!"

"Then you did suspect!" she cried. "You did, and you let Mark go---for some old sinner in high place!"

"I didn't say that; I said, 'suppose.'"

"You meant it! Was any old man worth Mark's splendid youth, Uncle? He couldn't be!"

"Perhaps his people were. Think of the disgrace."

"Think of it? Yes!" she cried, "think of what he's got to face---Mark! He won't let me face it with him. He refuses to let me do it."

"You mean you asked this---this ex-convict to marry you, Pam?" he cried sitting up in his chair.

"He wanted me --- he wouldn't take me because of this. Uncle Herbert I love him. Oh, please help me clear him!" She crumpled down again on her knees beside his chair, clinging to his hand, sobbing. "I'm so wretched!" she wept. "I wanted to go with him---and he wouldn't take me!"

"Good heavens!" the old man murmured to himself. He felt no impulse of rage now, only the weakness that follows it. How extraordinary these new girls were! Then he added, aloud: "That's decent of him. I begin to like him, Pam."

"Oh, you'd like him. He's splendid; he's big---he's generous, and he's suffered! It isn't right. Uncle Herbert, where's your old suspect? Fat and sleek somewhere, getting older and older---no use presently---and all Mark's splendid youth gone like this."

"He'll live it down. He's young." Burleson argued hoarsely. "Besides, who knows? There are often deathbed confessions, one may clear him presently."

She scorned that. "Do you think a man who'd done that---and let youth suffer for it---would confess?" she demanded furiously.

He nodded, moving his long fingers restlessly on the arm of the chair. "He might, Pam."

"He wouldn't. Uncle Herbert, you'll clear him for me, won't you?"

"Do you care so much, child?"

[illegible] ears. His hiding me [illegible] slave, I can't bear it, that he should be [illegible]---that!"

"Suppose I'd done it, Pam? Would you want me---at my time of life---to go out and confess it? When the boy's taken his punishment and he's only to start fres[redacted]"

He leaned back in his chair, studying her. "I tell you what I can do, Pam," he said finally. "I've offered to do it already---told Fosdick I can help him to a new chance."

She scorned that. "You mean money? That's nothing! He can work---I know he'd rather."

"I didn't mean just money---I've got a little pull on the railways. I could help him to a good berth. I'm like you, in a way, I think he should have a new chance."

"I don't think anything matters half so much as his good name, Uncle Herbert." She was still on her knees beside him; she twined her arms about his arm and held him. "Who was the man you suspected?"

"That was only a suppositious case, Pam," he said hoarsely. "I suspect no one at all."

She gazed at him wide-eyed. "You're not telling me the truth, Uncle Herbert!"

"I'm not --- what?" he asked fiercely, frowning.

"You're treating me like a baby. I'm not---I'm [redacted] woman and I love a man you helped to send to prison. Yes, you did! You testified against him."

Burleson seized her young wrists and raised her to her feet; he had to rise to do it.

"Now, you listen! You go and sit down and listen! I'm going to put it up to you."

She obeyed him. She thought he was going into one of his tempers, but she no longer cared. She was too miserable. She sat down at the library table, a limp, small figure, and waited, watching him. He was grayer than ever, but there was fire in his eyes. He leaned toward her, talking slowly, striking the arms of his chair sometimes.

"Suppose I did help send this boy to prison," he said bitingly. "Suppose I testified against him---what then? It was a mere routine. I knew his uncle well---I knew him---a little; he was a boy, tall, lanky, hot-tempered, something of a dare-devil and the uncle was hard and close---as nails. He had a way of saying taunting things, he could be insulting---politely. Suppose then, someone killed him, struck him down, found that it fitted on to the nephew like a glove---he'd been there, and all that. Suppose he let it go at that, and the boy took the punishment, got through with it and has his chance to make his life over. D'you suppose the other man---secure and comfortable and rich---would step down to prison to clear him---after fifteen years?"

"No," she replied clearly, "I don't think he would unless you made him. He's too bad a man. A man who lets another suffer for him is wicked!"

He stared after her; a man of affairs, a man of the world, arguing with a child! His face twisted again into that ironical smile, but he looked ill and gray.

"You're right. No one would. That's why it wouldn't do me any good to shout out suspicions at this day. The issue's dead. I couldn't induce any man to step down from his place and disgrace himself for nobody!"

Irvine was the speaker to a full house. Mr. Chester Ronning received the Federal nomination. Mrs. A. J. Thornley attended and was elected to the board of directors.

Wild fruit is very plentiful in this district this year. All possible time is utilized picking and canning raspberries, gooseberries and saskatoons; and still some fruit is of necessity left to waste.

Lights were blazing, horns were blowing and confetti was in the air at the Ministik Hall last Friday night in celebration of the marriage of one of our girls, Muriel Barnes, to Don Miller of Salisbury. It was one of the largest crowds seen at the hall in recent years, as friends gathered from far and near. The wedding ceremony was solemnized in the beautiful new Metropolitan United Church, Edmonton, with the Minister, the Rev. McElroy Thompson officiating. Following the ceremony there was a reception in the city for the immediate families of the newlyweds. Then came the big reception at the Ministik Hall. The wedding dance was led off by the bride and groom, the bridesmaid, the bride's sister Nora, and best man, Ralph Leach, to the strains of "I Love You Truly." It made a very pretty picture. Mr. and Mrs. Miller have left for their honeymoon at Banff. To the many good wishes offered them that day, their friends add as many more again for long life and every happiness and joy.

Pte. Howard Curtis is home on furlough at present from the advanced training camp of Wainwright. He's looking very fit.

Mrs. Grace Swabey is visiting her mother, Mrs. Campbell, at Entwistle.

Mr. and Mrs. S. Hampson of Togo, Saskatchewan, were visitors at the Davenport home last week.

Notice to all boys and girls from 10 to 18 years in the Ministik, Hastings Lake, and Looma Vista districts! Camping season is almost here! Starting with the Girl's Camp next week, the dates are: Girls: Aug. 1st to 8th; Boys, August 8th to 15th. The place, Lakeview. The camps are under the genial management of Dr. Stanley Scott of Bremner. The Girls' Camp is being directed by Miss Betty Sands, well-known Edmonton C.G.I.T. leader, while the boys will be very fortunate in having the Rev. W. Gray Rivers of Calgary, Boys' Work Secretary for Alberta. These camps are very efficiently handled, and, as any boy or girl who has ever been to such a camp know, camping is a never-to-be-forgotten experience. Further details may be learned from Ernest Nix at Ministik or Dr. Scott at Bremner, but if you're coming you had better hurry, because numbers are definitely limited!

Mrs. Frank Swabey and young son Lawrence are now home from Edmonton. There must be busy times in the Swabey household, are there, Frank?

Ralph Leach had a nasty accident the first of the week. While splitting kindling, the axe slipped and gashed deeply between the thumb and forefinger of the left hand. An artery was severed, and though Ralph lost quite a quantity of blood, he was rushed to the city where prompt aid was received. We hope your hand is soon as good as ever, Ralph.

Mr Martin Lawson motored to Camrose Sunday of last week. He was accompanied home by his sister, Miss Mabel Lawson, for her school holidays.

After spending a week at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Mitchell, Miss Margaret left on Monday for a week's holiday at Banff, before taking up duties again at the Hudson Bay store.

Mr. A. F. Schultz took in the Calgary stampede.

Misses Corrine Haukedahl and Gladys McLennan closed a successful term of school with a picnic on the Sears farm July 14. Fine weather helped make it a success. Softball and races for entertainment, lots of eats, home made ice cream, soft drinks, as well as dinner and supper, made everybody happy.

In speaking of picnics, we see by the Edmonton Bulletin, the first picnic at South Beaver Lake, was held on the Owen farm fifty years ago. No doubt the Cookson family could tell you what they did for entertainment, but we know in the forties, the writer's brother, Ernie Ingram, used to ride the "old gray mare" and come out first too.

The members of the Ladies' Aid are giving themselves a pat on the back by choosing the most ideal picnic day of the year. A large crowd was present and no mishaps of any kind marred the day. Not being a sport's writer and busy taking in the nickels and dimes, did not get an account of the ball games and races. But we know Lakeshore took home first prize. Was glad to see Howard Lee on base again. Kingman girls came out victorious in soft ball and in the races little Gary Sears won his nickel. He said "there wasn't anybody behind him anyway."

We wish to thank one and all, as it would be impossible to make these picnics successful if it wasn't for the support of the non members and some men and boys in the neighborhood. Thanks again. The young folks put on a dance at the school which was a success too, but we haven't the figures what they made for the Red Cross. Money taken in at the table, $111.10; expenses $10.82; leaving a balance of $100.28. As much, if not more, was taken in at the stand. As yet, we haven't a statement.

Mrs. Fannie Sutton sr., a highly respected old-timer of our district, passed away Monday evening. Mrs. Sutton had not enjoyed good health for several years. On Sunday she was taken worse and on Monday was taken to an Edmonton hospital, but passed away before reaching the hospital. More details will be given next week by the family.

SEVENTY TO ONE---

THERE HAS JUST concluded at Bretton Woods, New Hampshire, U.S.A. a conference of great importance to the trading nations of the world. High ranking financial representatives from forty or more countries met in conference lasting quite a number of days. Their purpose was to formulate a plan that would make possible soon after the war ended, a resumption of international trade that would function smoothly and be without the disadvantages of the system in vogue prior to the war when internationally gold was king. Apparently, gold is still going to be a very important product, and a standard by which, if not as rigidly heretofore, a nation will be considered at any given time, solvent or bankrupt.

The problems of this conference which it could be said in passing was planned and charted for 18 months before it was actually held, were not easy. Like all international conferences based on co-operation and good will, there was still that sense of self interest to be guarded, lest one or more nationals become either over aggressive or over generous. But the really stupendous task the conference had to accomplish was to devise a plan whereby the world's business could be made to function smoothly when world trade, based on gold security for payment, exceeded at one time its security value by about 70 times. This we take to mean that seventy dollars worth of international trade was transacted on one dollars worth of gold security. If this is true it would almost seem that there is little value in having any security at all. However, experts seem to think that there is a need for some kind of gold anchorage and a huge stabilization fund, centred in a world bank is proposed. An imposing list of nations will contribute to this huge fund and if necessary borrow from it. In the course of international trade conducted on a gold basis there are times when certain nations have adverse balances, that is they are buying to a greater value than they are selling. This in pre war days had the effect of forcing a nation's currency down which in turn simply made a bad situation worse. This led to political interference in the way of import tariffs, quotas, embargoes, etc., which in the belief of many people led directly to war.

It should be said that the conference at Bretton Woods is of a preliminary nature, and while it is true that it is a very important one and among those attending are many important personages, any recommendations it may make still have to be passed by the various legislative bodies of the countries represented at the conference.

Like all new innovations the proposal that this huge fund be formed by gold contributions of a number of countries will likely meet, in fact has met with some opposition. Some experts believe that a fund of this kind would simply result in a borrowers paradise, with the poorer nations borrowing from the richer and being unable to pay back. Other experts claim that if managed right the fund can be made to function to the benefit of all nations.

On the surface it would appear that to a farmer in the M.D. of Beaver, the Bretton Woods conference is of little interest. It is remote, its financial language means different things at different times and places. Sums mentioned are in the billions of dollars, almost too vast to be comprehended and Mr. Ordinary Citizen is to be excused if he reads the first few lines of a Bretton Woods despatch and shrugs his shoulders. But whether one is interested or not, the fact remains that Canada is a food exporting country in a big way and that every individual farmer has a stake in the enterprise. If through deliberations just concluded post war international trade is to be made to function more smoothly, it will mean a direct benefit to each and every individual farmer with a food product to sell. It is more than likely that the experts will still have the 70 to 1 gold-trade problem to worry over but certainly any scheme devised to make world trade easier cannot but help a food exporting country.

To The Editor.

One evening sometime ago I was sitting in a recreation room reading, when I picked up a paper and in it I found this verse. As I sat there reading it, I thought of how well someone had put into words the thoughts of each and everyone of us as we wait each day to hear our name called when the mail comes in and what a great comfort it is to receive the letters from home and the people we know there.

I often get the Tofield paper from my folks and I enjoy reading it, as it seems to bring home a little closer to us here.

A LETTER FROM HOME

Please remind the people who know me,
Ere I left our country to roam,
That there is nothing money could bring me,
As good as a letter from home.

I watch every day for the mail man;
I hope there's a letter today.
If he passes my name without pause-[redacted]
I'll solemnly walk away.

So have them send me a letter,
A word from across the foam;
There is nothing a soldier so prays for
As much as a letter from home.

ON SHIP THAT FERRIED FIRST TROOPS TO INVASION COAST

Stoker Lloyd C. Flatten of Edmonton, son of Mr. and Mrs. O. Flatten of that city, was on board one of the R.C.N. craft that ferried troops across in the initial stages of the invasion. He is well known in the Bardo area, being the grandson of Mr and Mrs. H. Jenson, residents of the Tofield district since 1901. The navy craft upon which he was serving during the invasion was his first seagoing ship. He is but 19 years old and last reports were that he was doing well.

C.C.F. Quiz

WOULD LIFE INSURANCE POLICIES BE SAFE UNDER A C.C.F. GOVERNMENT?

Yes.

Only the wealth of the nation behind them can make them safe. If in 1932 the Bennett government had not, by order-in-council, allowed certain powerful financial and life insurance corporations to conceal the results of their financial transactions, a panic would have ensued which would have wiped out thousands of life insurance policies and savings accounts.

Life insurance will cost much less and be very much safer under a national insurance plan because it will be backed by all the resources of the nation.

In the depression period 83 per cent of all life insurance policies in Canada ended. Some by death, some by cash surrender and 55 per cent lapsed.

WOULD THERE BE COMPLETE RELIGIOUS AND POLITICAL FREEDOM UNDER A C.C.F. GOVERNMENT?

Yes.

The C.C.F. manifesto is very definite on this point. It reads: "Freedom of speech and assembly for all; equal treatment before the law of all residents of Canada irrespective of race, religious or political beliefs."

The very core of the C.C.F. program is full political, economic and religious freedom. It was to establish and maintain such freedom that the C.C.F. was formed.

Democracy In Business

The co-operative movement is democracy in business. As it depends on human agencies to conduct it, it can never be perfect, but it is a long way ahead of the capital stock company and the modern trust corporation.

Co-operation does not exist in law or in formula. It exists in the minds and hearts and purposes of the people. It is founded on mutual confidence and trust. With the development of these ideals people can make a success of co-operation.

The Alberta Wheat Pool is a creation of the farmers of this province. It has demonstrated its efficiency as a business organization and also its adherence to the co-operative principles. To make it a greater success than ever, it needs the interest and support of a greater number of the farm people of this province.

The Need For A Hospital In Our Community

(The Second of a Series of Articles sponsored by Tofield and District Community League).

This week we propose to give further reasons for the need of a hospital to serve the health needs of the citizens of our Community.

We hear much in our day of the wonderful advances made in medical science. Illnesses that were formerly fatal can now be cured by the latest treatments. However effective these methods may be in thery, in practice, they have to be applied to the individual patient before they can help him or her. We all know that there are many among us who are putting off medical treatment because they have to go a distance to obtain it. In some cases the only hardship to them is the pain they must [illegible] while waiting, but in most cases the illness becomes gravely aggravated by delay.

Many people too, respond to treatment much more quickly if they are still in touch with their familiar surroundings than they do among strangers at a distance from home. If we had a hospital of our own here people would not feel so far away from their families and their relatives and friends could see their progress and not feel so much at a loss for them as they do now when they are always at a distance in case of being in the hospital.

Again too, we must remember that even if we can obtain hospitalization at a distance we must figure in the extra cost of transporiation each and every time to and from the hospital.

The money that has been spent on hospitalization outside this district in the past would have built and equipped as fine a hospital for ourselves as we could want.

Doing the best we can for those who are sick among us now may come home to each one of us sooner than we think. We are all liable to become sick and when we are sick we all like to be looked after.

Upon how well we look after the sick among us depends our showing as to whether we ever think of anyone but ourselves. He who thinks of no one but himself is of little use to the community.

Let us all get together and try to solve this problem of a Community Hospital, not on the basis of what Tom, Dick or Harry want or don't want, but on the basis of what is best for us all.

Social Credit Picnic Well Attended

A large and enthusiastic crowd was in attendance last week at the long-heralded Social Credit Picnic held at Weslake's Beach, Hastings Lake. Mr. Floyd Baker, M.L.A., the speaker of the afternoon, was introduced by Mr. Murray of Tofield. Mr. Baker reviewed some of the achievements of the Social Credit Government made during the past nine years. The Government of Alberta is recognized as the most progressive in Canada, not only in Alberta, but throughout the whole Dominion, the speaker stated. He also referred to his own work as a Member and said that he felt it his duty to act in the interests of his constituents at all times. Mr. Baker spends much of his time visiting the sick of his constituency who are in hospital in Edmonton. He invited any of the audience to let him know when there were any such persons he might visit, either by writing him or telephoning him at his home or office address. The speaker said he believed that the people of Alberta could do no better than to give the Social Credit government the mandate to go ahead and finish the job which they have only nicely begun in the last nine years.

A BETTER BREAK FOR AGRICULTURE

The total revenue of the province in the year 1942-43 was $27,961,197.97.

The amount spent by the Department of Agriculture was $531,963, or less than 2 cents out of each dollar collected!

This is too small a proportion of the provincial income to be spent on a basic industry of the province. A C.C.F. government will extend farm services in keeping with the needs of agriculture, and in proportion to the provincial revenue.

SYNOPSIS

Released from prison after serving fifteen years for a murder he didn't commit, Mark Grant goes to the office of a lawyer named Fosdick to collect a legacy left to him while he was in prison. When Fosdick tells him he will have to wait, Mark accepts an invitation to a party to help Teddy Banks win a bet with Archie Landon. Although Mark tells them his real name, Archie introduces him as "Stewart Byram." At the party Mark meets Burleson, the man who sent him to prison, and Burleson's niece, Pamela Rodney. Burleson does not recognize him, and Mark decides not to reveal his identity to Pam until he finds the real murderer. Fosdick learns of his deception. Pam asks Burleson to give her his little jade god and is surprised when he angrily refuses and tells her he is going to smash it before he dies. When Teddy Banks learns Mark's identity from Fosdick he tells Archie. Landon, jealous of Mark's attentions to Pam, goes to Mark's room but Mark is not there. Landon then hails a taxi, directing the driver to Burleson's address. Meanwhile, Mark is at Burleson's with Pam. He tells her about the wager and confesses that he has been in prison. Suddenly he sees a familiar object—a little jade god. Pam tells him it is Burleson's and promises to help him when he tells her the jade god is important to him, but her faith in him is shaken when Landon arrives and tells her Mark killed his uncle for money. Burleson recognizes Mark and realizes the significance of the jade god. In a fury he smashes the jade piece. Mark tells Pam that, since Burleson has the jade god he must have been with his uncle after Mark left him. His testimony would prove that the murdered man was alive when Mark left him. After Mark leaves Pam has a talk with Burleson. She tells him that she believes any man who would let another take his punishment for him deserves to die.

"Wouldn't he?" She leaned back in her chair, her eyes brave. "I don't see why. He's got nothing to lose."

"Nothing to lose?" he repeated, astonished.

"No, nothing! He lost everything years ago when he let a young man suffer for him. He's worse than a murderer. He's a coward."

Burleson's face changed; its grayness seemed to deepen but his eyes burned brighter, he studied the girl, moving his fingers along the arms of his chair again. She met his look unflinchingly, her head up.

"Any man's a coward who lets another take his punishment," she declared.

He nodded. "Admitted," he said dryly; "but sometimes there are—extenuating circumstances."

She shook her head. "No!"

He made no reply, he sat for a long while, apparently thinking; once or twice he glanced toward the windows. It was dark outside except for the fantastic lights in the street. All the while, he was aware of the young girl at his table. She had stretched out a slender hand and picked up an old pen and was scratching it aimlessly about, without ink, on a bit of paper. He saw her fingers shake. She was so young that she seemed no more than a child to him, and she had offered to face an old disgrace with a convict—because she loved him. It was only fancy, of course; she had not known the young man long! But he tested her again.

"You think you love this fellow?" he asked her dryly, "this convict?" he barked the word at her.

She tried to answer quietly, but her courage failed her, she broke down. "It's killing me to think of him — facing all this — and he wouldn't take me with him! It's terrible to face it—and to be alone, too!" she sobbed, and suddenly she stretched her arms out on the table and laid her head, down on them, weeping violently.

He watched her intently, the young head prone, the slender young shoulders shaken with sobs. Grief had her, grief—poignant, innocent, consuming—as the child's first tears over a dead canary. Suddenly he rose and put his hand gently upon her head. Her soft hair was like a child's too. He remembered his own dead little son. He was a lonely old man, after all! Youth and the thrill of its appeal, its demand for happiness, began to penetrate the armor of his age and his worldliness.

Then she broke out again. "Someone did it, and I don't see how he can think of it, think of leaving Mark to face his sins, and sleep at night!"

Burleson gave her a long look—a look she did not see.

"Maybe he doesn't, Pam," he said dryly. "Come to think of it, I don't believe he does!"

"He ought to die!" she cried fiercely. "He ought to have died long ago!"

"Good God!" said Burleson below his breath, and turned away.

Fosdick went to Burleson's office the next day in a rare puzzle. He had been called up at home the night before and told to find Mark Grant and tell him to meet him there. Aware of his own silence about Grant, Fosdick had a bad quarter of an hour. Of course Banks had told! The little cad had run bleating like a sheep. But, even so, he saw no reason to summon Mark and himself to a bar of justice—Burleson's office, in this case. Mark was free. Burleson could do nothing against him now, at least nothing that Fosdick could imagine. Then he remembered the rich man's suggestion to help. Was he going to carry that out? Fosdick grinned a little. He knew Mark would not take it.

"The boy was guilty; he's been punished—what's the use of making a fuss over Banks and the wager now? Unless—" he thought of Pamela Rodney and suffered a twinge of conscience.

Burleson met him calmly enough. "Sit down," he laconically, and then: "You got Grant, you say? Well, he's late."

Fosdick grinned. "He didn't want to come."

Burleson nodded. "Very likely!" Then he pushed a broken green jade head, bearded and saturnine, toward the lawyer. "Keep that, Fosdick. you'll need it."

Fosdick picked it up and looked it over curiously; he was beginning to think that his friend's mind was affected. "Health's bad enough," he thought; "got water in the brain, I'll bet a dollar!" But he put the jade god's head down with a gingerly touch.

"I remember. Used to squat on your table. How did you break it?"

Burleson looked at it bleakly: he was gray as ashes today. "I smashed it. Temper, Fosdick, once in awhile I break out. It's rotten, but it's a fact. It's the second time I've pitched that accursed jade god; I wish I'd smashed it to begin with!"

"Humph!" Fosdick poked it with his long bony forefinger. "Where did you get it anyway?"

"Grant Barton gave it to me."

"Eh?" The old lawyer straightened up, suddenly his eyes met the hollow eyes opposite and he felt a qualm of dismay. What the deuce did it mean? Then he heard a door open and looked around. A clerk was showing Mark Grant into the sanctum. Fosdick stared at the young man with a feeling he could not define; it certainly could not be admiration for a criminal, or even toleration, yet he had to admit—reluctantly—that Mark's very presence in the room was like a rush of fresh air in a choking atmosphere. There was something in his size, in his clean-cut face and clear eyes, that was reassuring; his guilt never appeared on the surface. Fosdick admitted that; he looked like a brave man with a clear conscience. He seemed to tower, too, and the lawyer thought that Burleson, by comparison, grew leaner, more gray and more morose.

Burleson, too, was studying the newcomer and no one spoke until Mark broke the silence that seemed to him soaked through by their cool examination of him. "Think I'm a jailbird!" he thought hotly. Then artly, to Burleson:

"You sent for me."

Burleson nodded. "Sit down," he said in a voice that struck Fosdick at once as singular; he looked around at him sharply.

"Thank you; I'll stand. I'm going out of town almost at once," Mark retorted shortly. Then his eye fell on the broken jade head on the desk, and the blood leaped into his face. "Is it about that?" he asked quickly.

"Yes," Burleson replied quietly; "you're right about it, I could have cleared you; your uncle gave that to me after you'd left him."

Mark's face hardened. "I was sure of it! You'll state that now, Mr. Burleson?"

Burleson smiled oddly. "That's why I sent for you. I can do more than that,"—he paused an instant, staring in front of him—then he went on coldly—"your uncle gave it to me. After that we quarreled. You know the things Grant Barton said when he was angry? He said too many of them, I lost my temper and flung the jade god in his face. It struck his temple and killed him instantly."

"Good God!" Fosdick's violent surprise made him collapse in his chair, but neither Mark nor Burleson flinched.

"I always felt you knew something," Mark said bitterly; "and you let me suffer!"

"I let things go!" Burleson drummed on the arms of his chair with nervous fingers. "The whole thing happened in a minute; I didn't expect to hit him. To my utter amazement he went down like lead."

Fosdick rallied his powers now; he sat up. "Why, in God's name didn't you tell it at once? It was unpremeditated—in a quarrel!"

Burleson nodded coldly. "Granted! But a man doesn't think clearly in such a case at once. I was horror-stricken, naturally; was going to call a doctor, but I felt of him—he was stone dead! It was the most amazing thing; it knocked me out." He leaned back in his chair passing his hand quickly over his face.

There was a moment's pause; in it they both heard Mark's hard drawn breath.

"I picked up the jade god and put it in my pocket; God knows why! I've never got rid of it since; it's been there grinning at me. Then, by chance, Barton's nephew was accused." Burleson turned to Mark. "You were a boy; there wasn't evidence enough to hang you—my wife and son were alive; a scandal like my trial would have killed her—well, you know the end; I yielded to temptation; I was silent."

"Yes," said Mark slowly; "I've known fifteen years of your silence! And you meant to let it go on—I'm sure of that!" he turned and stood looking down at the old man, his youth splendid now in the flush of its vindication. "I'm innocent; you'll have to make it good now," he cried; "but why—do you admit it?"

Burleson smiled bleakly; he was like a man who had escaped something—put something away; he was detached, hard, unafraid. Fosdick stared at him. "He's mad!" he thought.

"You can call it conscience," Burleson said, answering Mark, "or you can call it loss of nerve. I always planned to do something about it; a deathbed confession, I suppose, something dramatic! Off and on I've asked about you in prison; I was playing for time; for years I haven't been a well man, and now the doctors give me two years at most. I thought you would wait, but—I've heard something about that!" He shifted his position slightly, frowning, thinking of Pam's bowed head; it was true that she touched the only soft spot in his heart. "I see how you feel," he went on, "but I'm giving you your revenge. As for myself, I suppose if a man does the square thing in the end, it's something. I've got Fosdick here to take charge of it. He can go ahead."

"It'll be ruin, Burleson! My God, why didn't you speak then—or not at all?" Fosdick cried.

Burleson, handing him a paper, looked at him oddly.

"They can't send me to the chair?"

"They won't; it's second degree," said Fosdick dryly. "Its up to me to get it light for you—but this silence—the other fellow suffering!" Insane temper, temporary aberration—no end of money for alienists; Fosdick saw a hundred lawyer ways of fighting it for months—he mustn't die in prison! "I'll make a big fight, but—" he stared at Burleson bleakly—"man, it's the disgrace—it'll ruin you all! The country'll ring with it; you're known everywhere."

Burleson's gray face twisted; he turned and glanced at Mark.

"This young man here would say it was fair and that I had my share," he remarked dryly, "not that I've escaped—I've had a living hell of it for years."

Mark said nothing. He turned suddenly and walked to the window, staring out with unseeing eyes. He thought of those fifteen bitter years, of the convict's lot, of his lost youth, and this man safe and sleek in high place. Then he heard Fosdick's voice—the snap in it weakened into a husky growl.

"Two years? Good heavens; you might as well have waited. Then it would be only a nine days' wonder; no one to be punished. Now—they'll send you to prison!"

There was a silence, then Burleson's voice. "My wife's dead, the boys, too; that's all there is to it. Of course the others—"

"Yes, the others!" barked Fosdick, staring hard at Mark's back; of course it was a vindication, but this man—had stood so high!

Burleson touched the paper on his desk. "You'll put it through, Fosdick? I'm tired of it; I'll take it when it comes. Now—" He turned, too, and glanced at the young man at the window—"you can both leave; I've done my share."

Fosdick rose; he was white and his eyes stared, but he took the paper. "It'll mean a trial," he said harshly; "I'll have to drag you into court."

Burleson, who had sunk lower in his chair, nodded. "Make it as clear as you can—if I'm to go to jail—" he laughed discordantly, turning to Mark. "Young man, you're avenged; it's harder for me to go to jail for two years now—and to die there—than it was for you. You've got your life before you—I'm done!"

"He doesn't count that," said Fosdick dryly; "it's revenge that's sweet, Burleson."

He was tucking the confession into his breast pocket, but the motionless figure rasped on him.

"You'll be needed, too, Grant," he said sharply; "I'll have to ask your pardon for my treatment of you; they'll make everything right in court now—and you can have it put in the papers."

Suddenly Burleson groaned. The hideous publicity of it made him wince. He seemed already to hear the strident calls of the newsboys—"Extry!"

Mark turned. There was a light in his face; he held his head high.

"Wait," he said to Fosdick; "one moment! Keep that paper. I've had fifteen years—I can afford to wait two more."
